an alliance between Chile and Great Britain against the United States.

The United States legation is again being closely watched by the police, in the manner adopted some weeks ago, when the legation's right of asylum was questioned. No reason as far as learned has been assigned for this re-newed surveilance. It is probable the government takes this means of keeping fully advised of all who enter or leave the legation and also to make the right of asylum as difficult and trying as possible. In any event the fact cannot be lost sight of that this esplonage is annoying to members of the United States legation as well as to the American colony at large. That the police on duty near the American legation are under instructions to make arrests of persons leaving that place in certain contingencies is manifested from the fact that two ladies calling at Minister Egan's were placed under arrest last night, as they came out into the street. After examination they were permitted to depart. These incidents are magnified by conditions of public feeling here and by the status of the negotiations between the United States and Chile.

My message to the Secretary of the Navy was in the code, so that no one knew its purport. The officer who went on shore told me that every one knew that the opposition had reached Aconcagua River; in fact he obtained more information than I had. No information was given by me of what I had observed, and the crew of the boat which went on shore were cautioned not to answer any questions. On the afternoon of the 29th uit. I called, in uniform, on Admiral Montt and Col. Holley and renewed the acquaintance with them which had been made at Iquique. I was cordially received by both of the gentlemen. At that time I explained to Señor Montt all the facts connected with my visit to Quintero. So this I say officially, that no one except the German officer, other than those belonging to my ship, were on board at the time.

KNOKSVILLE, (Tenn...) Oct. 31.—[By the Associated Press.] The guards who were in charge of the stockade at Briceville have just arrived. The Briceville have just arrived. The stockade at that place was burned as reported last night; that at Coal Creek belonging to the Knoxville Iron Company was not burned, but the convicts employed in it were released and are all at large. The arms of the guards were all captured. No resistance was made and consequently no blood was shed. The miners who effected the release seem to have acted with the greatest secrecy, showing perfect organization.

There is no outward indication of Immediate action and the people are beginning to believe that the matter will be left to the courts for settlement. The action of the miners seems to be a surprise to citizens in the vicinity of Briceville. Those who, in defiance of law released the convicts, repaired to the stockade soon after dark, gave their orders and the work was done. All was quiet at the mines this morning and no immediate trouble need be anticipated.

The liberated convicts aided the men in burning and destroying property, and also looted the store of Warden Chumley at Coal Creek. The magazine at the Briceville stockade np, and this, together with the explo-sion of several dynamite bombs, created the impression in town that a terrible fight was in progress. As a matter of fact, however, no one was injured.

ADMIRAL BROWN'S DEFENSE. Charges that He Gave Information to Balmaceda Denied.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 31 .- [By the Associated Press.] A Valparaiso letter under date of September 15, details at length the topics under discussion by Chileans relative to the attitude of the United States during the war against Balmaceda. The letter refers to the allegations of Chileans that the United States Minister Egan was intimate with Balmaceda, and that his sympathies were with the latter's government, and that, since Balmaceda's downfall Egan's influence had protected many political prisoners. The letter states that it has been generally understood that it has been generally understood that the American Minister intended opening a commercial house in Valparaiso after the expiration of his term of office, and made use of his influence with the late government for his future prospective benefit. Reference is also made to the charges that Admiral Brown of the United States cruiser, San Francisco, acted the part of informant to Balmaceda concerning the Congressionalists' movements, and had afforded protection to President elect Vicuna, officers of Balmaceda's government and others.

Concerning some of these charges the Admiral's letter as printed in the Perrocatic and republished in other journals is given as follows:

New York, Oct. 81.—The Chilean trouble shows its effect at the Brooklyn Navy Yard in renewed activity being displayed in fitting out all vessels now there. The number of men engaged upon the Miantonomah has been increased, and from conversation with her officers it is learned that she could be got ready for sea within ten days if occasion should require it. She is classed by all officers as the most formidable ship in the navy, and if necessary she could be in Chilean waters within two months.

A rumor got abroad yesterday that orders had been sent from Secretary Tracy to the Brooklyn navy-yard to have three ships sail as soon as possible for Chile, but Capt. Erben, commandant of the yard denies that he had received such orders. It is learned that three ships, the Philadelphia, Concord and Kearsarge are being prepared to leave on Tuesday for the West Indies.

This Day's Array.

ALBERT MCFARLAND.

The very popular classified line advertising department of THE TIMES, represented today, as usual, on the first, second and third pages, contains 14 columns of classified line advertisements, embracing the large number of 526 separate business announce. ments. In the best and broadest sense this can be called popular advertising The uniform rate charged is 5 cents per agate line daily, and scores and hundreds of persons here make their wants known, and obtain what they seek by the expenditure of a trifling sum of cash.

THERE is a newly discovered cigarette bug which belongs to the family of colleoptera. It is a very dissipated bug.

THE new cabinet of New South Wale announces that the colony will impose moderate protective duties. Sensible people, even if they do live on the under side of the world!

YOLO COUNTY has declared war on Sacramento, and will raise the levées on the river opposite that city. Sacramento will now have to hustle and meet Yolo's raise, or call the turn.

THE Oakland Tribune thinks there's something in a name, and welcomes Miss Drinkwater to the charge of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Berkeley. It says: "The lady be longs within the one mile (prohibition) limit, and she should never change her name, which gives excellent advice, albeit, hard to follow in Berkeley.

THE Fort Marcy military reservation comprising between sixteen and seventeen acres of land in the very heart of Santa Fé, and which, the New Mexican says, has stood as a menace and an eye sore to the modern progress of the city since the post was abandoned, last spring, has been ordered transferred from the custody of the War Department to the Interior Department and will be sold at public auction.

This Morning's dispatches from Santiago indicate that Chile really wants war with the United States, and will leave nothing undone to bring about a conflict. Police are again watching the the United States legation at Santiago, and annoying its members by petty insults. Hope of an alliance between Chile and England against the United States is probably one of the inspiring causes of the insolence now exhibited

AT Richmond the other day the Con federate Gen. Field is credited with having said: "I understand that the Confederate flag cannot be unfurled at the World's Fair," and added: "If that is the case let us never have another World's Fair in this country." Not so! Let's have another fair, but never another rebellion. Fairs cost less and are more satisfactory. Field, however, denies the utterance-which is to his

"CLAUDE PAYNE" has for his associate on the Egyptian expedition J. J. Coyle. Both are Pomona men. Mr. Covle was a former sub-officer in the British Army, who, while in that service, penetrated with his command to near Khartoum, where Gen. Gordon lost his life, and near which place his body is supposed purpose expedition to revisit the spot, if the wily natives can be cajoled or persuaded to suffer the Americans to pass into their inner circles. Other expeditions into other parts of that ancient and mouldy land are contemplated.

THE San Diego Union's candor in the following paragraph is to be com-mended: "The windmill theory, coupled with the dry-farm fallacy, which heretofore been so persistently advocated in San Diego county for the purpose of unloading on the "tenderfo has done more to retard development in our county than all other influences combined. No man without a bank account of respectable proportions should attempt to pump water for irrigation Experience has demonstrated time and again that it cannot be done with profit and success combined.

THE last circular of Henry Clews & Co. announces that the New York stock is dull. "The shrinkage of transactions on the Exchange to less than one-half their late volume plainly means that an important class of large holders have sold out, and that they are not at present disposed to enter the market again at current values. a condition of present holdings usually results in either a reaction of prices, or in a prolonged stagnancy, during which comparatively weak holders have to keep up a forlorn struggle against the Numerous holders are apt to he not only of the feebler class, b include the least practiced and influential; and that is very much the case in the present situation of the market. capitalist class who were caught in the crisis of last fall with heavy loads of second and third rate stocks, have succeeded in transferring them to tran sient and speculative buyers, and the former class of operators, always so essential to a successful 'bull' movement are now out of the market, and their tactics are likely to favor the 'bear' side until prices are more tempting than These men are as the wind at present. to the sails, the steam to the locomotive, the money that 'makes the mare go,' and a market without them has usually a very unpromising prospect." In other words, it is now milking time in

The Chilean Situation.

C. C. ALLEN.

The Chilean difficulty still threaten war, though there is 'little outside of general talk and individual opinions from which to draw conclusions. out doubt the popular feeling in Chile is very much against the United States, and this may lead to further overt acts at any time. We were informed the other day that, as the result of a cabinet council, Secretary Blaine was formulating a reply to Chile's peppery message, and there was an unofficial intimation that this would be in the shape of a formal and stern demand. Just what it is will not develop, of course until after the delivery of the communication to the Chilean government Meanwhile the navy yards are active in preparing vessels for service, and the San Francisco, which is on her northward, will probably be intercepted at some Central American port and ordered back to Chilean waters. The Yorktown was off the coast of Brazil a week ago, and was then on he way to the scene of possible trouble. The Boston sailed for the same destination a week ago. The Baltimore is the only United States vessel now in Chilean waters. Within a month there will be five cruisers at hand to back up with show of force any demand which our Government chooses to make upon the bumptious South American republic.

Without doubt there is a very earnest feeling in this country concerning the threatened war, and, if the worst comes, the popular sentiment will fully justify a resort to extreme measures At the same time everybody hopes that the dignity of the Government may be maintained without bloodshed. time which must necessarily elapse in diplomatic correspondence will give some of the hotheads a chance to coo off. There is a possibility that common sense may come to the Chileans with a sober second thought.

THEY are having a great time over woman suffrage in a qualified form in Illinois. Superintendents of schools are to be elected on the first Tuesday of next month, and many women wish to participate in the election by virtue of a law passed by the last Legislature Some claim that the law is unconstitutional and some 'maintain its legality The Election Commissioners who are unfriendly to the movement attempted to put a quietus upon it by this absurd ruling issued to judges and clerks of registration:

Only such women as have received a cer-tificate of naturalization from some court of records in this State prior to January 1, 1870, are entitled to register."

This ruling excludes from registration all native-born women, and a very large percentage of those born abroad. Think what a howl the men would raise if an election commission attempted to disfranchise all native Americans and all foreigners not naturalized previous to 1870! One of the commissioners, however, objected to having his name attached to these instructions, and contended that all women having the qualfications of age, residence and citizenship required of males in art. 7 of the Constitution were entitled to register. The result was that the registration officers in some instances refused to put the names of women upon the books at all, and in others put them on without filling the blanks stating whether or not they were qualified voters. Meanwhile many prominent ladies are demanding what they consider their rights at the polls, and the matter is sure to be tested in the courts.

Two Government cruisers have been built on this Coast, one of which was named the San Francisco and the other the Charleston. Another is in course of completion which is called the Mon-Still another has been comterey. menced which has not yet been christened. What's the matter with calling this last one the Los Angeles? It is the policy of the Government to name vessels of this class after American cities, and certainly Los Angeles, as the sec ond city on the Pacific Coast, is entitled to recognition. As the car goes via the Santa Fé November 7, the time is very short, and exhibits can only be gathered together by voluntary contributions and these must be sent to the Chamber to be packed. As Indiana has never had an exhibit from this State now is a good chance to show her what California can raise. Every Hoosier in this vicinity should send something, as every article will be la-beled, giving name and locality, thus affording his friends a chance of chat-ting over his crops and speculating on how he grows such corn, potatoes and pumpkins without irrigation. Samples of the best produce should be sent to the chamber where they will be packed and shipped as the Chicago and San Francisco exhibits are. Every article should be separate so it can be placed on the tables and exhibited fresh and in good shape.

RIVERSIDE, Oct. 31.—[By the Associated Press.] A meeting of property owners along the bank of the Santa Ana River was held today at Colton to consider action against the present condition of the Bear Valley dam. Some days ago a committee visited the dam to ascertain as to the truth of its safety and conformity of its management to the report of Prof. Davidson, who in his report recognizes the right of the population living in the valleys below, and who recommended that water be drawn off the safety point and be kept there, which the company has refused and still refuses to do.

The meeting passed a resolution ask ing the company to reduce the water to the 481/4 foot level and remove obstruc tions from the waste weir so that faller timber may pass through in case of a flood. This action is taken on part of the property owners to provide against winter floods and the emergency of having a precipitation of rain. It is a well-known fact that an accident to the Bear Valley dam would destroy millions of dollars worth of prop-erty, and in all probability there would servy and in all probability there would be great loss of life. The company is engaged in the construction of a new dam of superior strength and endur-ance, but it will be at least two years in building, and the precaution asked is to guard against just what Prof. David-son gave as his opinion would happen if the waters were not kept to a 42-foot level. IN CONTEMPT.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 81.—[By the Associated Press.] Senator W. H. Williams of San Francisco has on the application of Jerry Lynch been summoned to appear before Judge Wallace for contempt in refusing to answer queswhether he received money for his vote on Senate Bill No. 62. Williams de-clined to answer on the ground that he refused to be made a witness against himself. A bench warrant has been issued with bail fixed at $1500.

According to the story of George W. Faylor in Judge Wallace's court when the boodle case was on trial, Williams was the originator of the celebrated combine of twenty-four. Faylor says that Williams suggested the thing and at his request took him to Dan Burns, and it was arranged that the nine San Francisco senators who had agreed to vote together should do so whenever Burns told them that the money for their votes had been paid. This was the nuecleus of a larger combine. Sub sequently seven interior senators joined the nine, making sixteen and after that the sixteen were joined by eight who had agreed to permit Burns to do "busi-ness for them."

ness for them."
This was Faylor's story in court and it was the intention of the grand jury to examine Williams upon this matter. Senate Bill No. 62, which Williams was asked about according to Lynch's affidavit, was the bill to reassess railroads of the State for delinquent taxes.

SPOOKS IN A JAIL.

How Murderer "Dutchy" Baker Came to Plead Guilty.

Ghostly Visitors Around His Cell by Nigh -His Strange Story Corroborated by Others-Not a Jail for Tramps.

SAN RAFAEL, (Cal.,) Oct. 81.—[By the Associated Press.] Much speculation has been indulged in during the last few days as to the reason of Henry, alias "Dutchy." Baker pleading guilty of murder. On the preliminary examination the preponderance of evidence was the big force and it is thought was in his favor, and it is thought man-slaughter would have been the extent of the verdict had the case come to trial.

A reporter interviewed Baker in his cell in the County Jail on the subject. Baker was found pacing the corridor in front of his cell, He presented a baggard and worn appearance. On being asked the reason for pleading guilty when he would have been likely to get a much lighter sentence by stand-ing trial, he said that he would be willing trial, he said that he would be willing to submit to almost any punishment in order to escape confinement in the Marin County Jail. He said: "The place is haunted. Every night about 11 o'clock I have been awakened by the noises of heavy weights dropping on the concretes, the rattling of chains, slamming of iron doors, and steady tramp, tramp of some invisible spook. This thing became unbearable to me, and had I not pleaded guilty, I would have been insane before my trial was over."

An inquiry in the Sheriff's office was not usunccessful. A number of prisoners confined in the jail during the past few years have made similar complaints. About a year ago W. F. Argo, a convict arrested for burglary, made an attempt to escape by sawing the iron bars from his window. His attempted escape was discovered, and that same evening he hanged himself in his cell. Prisoners confined in the jail at the time declared that Argo made his appearance nightly thereafter. When Baker first complained to the Sheriff of his nightly visitant, a deputy was instructed to watch for any nocturnal visitors. The first night of his vigil, he heard unmistakable sounds proceeding from the tanks where Baker was confined. The examination of the cells revealed accurate for the transparence. An inquiry in the Sheriff's office was fined. The examination of the cells revealed no cause for the strange noises. The reputation the jail has gained on account of its spooks is well-known among the tramp fraternity and they give it a very wide berth.

THE CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

A Treat for the Children at the Fair Yesterday.

The Orphans Handsomely Entertained During the Morning—The Matinee
During the Afternoon—The Fair Dinners.

Yesterday was a gala day for the children at the chrysanthemum fair. In the morning over fifty orphans from the Orphans' Home trooped in, and their eyes grew big with wonder as they paused at the threshold of the garden Coming in from the fog, which clouded the sun during the morning hours, the brightness and general beauty of the garden impressed one more forcibly than ever. The little folks were treated royally. Maj. Bonebrake preëmpted the ice cream booth for their benefit, and generous dishes of ice cream, with huge slices of cake at each plate, rapidly disappeared at the expense of the Major. One of the ladies made a canvas of the dining rooms in the base ment, collecting nickels of the guests. which were expended in candy for the orphans, each one trudging off home with a bag of sweets and joyful recol-lections of the fairyland they had been to purchase a sack of confectionery for each of the little ones at home, who were too small to appear in public, and sent them as a peace offering to the youngsters.

In the afternoon the school children flocked to the fair and passed through the gates at the rate of a dime apiece. They attended the matinee in the auditorium, where the Texas Parlor Quartette gavera splendld musical entertainment, and afterward wandered at will through the labyrinthine ways of the garden.

One of the most interested visitors at the fair since its opening is Mrs. Tyler, who has traveled all the way from the other side of the Tehachepi mountains, with a six-months-old baby in her arms. to see the crysanthemum show. That is true California enterprise of the spirit of '49.

THOSE FAIR DINNERS.

A regular banquet was served in the basement dining-room yesterday at basement dining-room yesterday at noon under the superintendence of Mrs. R. M. Widney, Mrs. W. W. Widney and Mrs. Carter. The delicious salads were a pronounced feature of the feast, to which a large number of the most prominent business men of the city did ample justice. On Monday Mrs. Mary A. Crawford, Mrs. J. H. Woodard, Mrs. Dandy, Mrs. Dr. Willer, Mrs. Doyle and Mrs. C. E. Brown, assisted by Mrs. R. M. Widney, will serve up a dinner fit for a king. Quince pie, of the genuine New England Thanksgiving variety, the kind your mother use to make, will be a favorite desert, and other delicacies and substantials will be in abundance. The substantials will be in abundance. members of the Board of Trade have announced their intention of dining in a body at the fair on that day. Mrs. G. L. Arnold will serve cocoa and chocolate hereafter, beginning on Monday, besides running the soda fountain.

Herve Friend the artist, was busy yesterday afternoon photographing the booths, the chrysanthemums and everything of interest that he could level his camera upon. The young ladies of the Japanese tea gardens made a charming group in their striking oriental costumes, standing near the thatched bamboo cottage. This, by the way, is one of the prettiest nooks in the garden. The cesy little Japanese house is enclosed with bamboo, the outer frieze outlined by a row of potted chrysanthemums which extend entirely around the house. The interior is gay with Japanese fans, lanterns, banners and screens. In the garden adjoining are tables Japanese tea gardens made a charming In the garden adjoining are tables where tea is served, and the knowledge that this particular brand retails at $2 per pound adds to its delicate flavor. A big placard ornaments the entrance with figures resembling gilded serpents coiled for a spring, but which the Japan coiled for a spring, but which the Japan-ese who made it says signifies "finest green tea." Misses Geneveive and Nor-man Robinson, Margaret Sumner, Mary and Katherine Campbell, Jessie Simon, Lillie Houser, Gertrude and Jessie Fin-ney, Helen Klokke and Miss L. Doane and Mrs. C. A. A favorite rendezvous, particularly with the ladies, is the snug little parlor at the right of the auditorium, where Mrs. Mary A. Crawford entertains visitors delightfully. There is always an extra rocker for every visitor; there is a piano and an organ, mirrors and pictures, and, above all, hearty good cheer. Afternoon receptions in this charming niche are becoming very popular.

The ladies had intended to have on The ladies had intended to have on exhibition at the fair a rare collection of 1500 potted asters, but, through some misunderstanding, they were some misunderstanding, they were brought to perfection too soon and are now all cut of bloom. Profiting by this experience the management will see that the ambitious flowers are kept within bounds and the period of their blooming better timed next year.

Monday evening Maj. Elderkin, their repressible, will give one of his famous lectures in the auditorium. The Major will be assisted by his efficient right hand man and co-worker. Tom Barnes, and judging from the preparation going on the entertainment will be something immense. The gentlemen, however, decline to give any advance notes as to its character, but simply say that the subject will be "The North Pole" and that the lecture will be illustrated. As the Major was never known to refer in any possible manner to the topic announced, when he gives his lectures, it is quite likely that his talk will concern either the Equator or the South Pole.

Last night the same unwearying crowd that has surged through the gates every evening since the opening of the fair was again in attendance. The strains of music were as bewitching, the flowers as lovely, the laddes' costumes as charming and the booths as gay as ever.

It is wonderful to note how much the chrysanthemums have grown since the opening of the fair. Many of them have opened out one-third larger than they were then.

FAIR NOTES. Miss Melzer assisted at the coffee ooth last night.

Mrs. E. C. Ransom admired the flowers last night. Maj. Hosack and Frank Burnett pat onized the ice-cream booth last night Mr. and Miss Anthony and Miss Davies were among the new comers last Miss Lucia Burnett and Miss Dunkel erger served ice-cream to a multitude of visitors. Tennyson's "Lady of the Lake" will be in the swim in the miniature lake tomorrow night.

Miss Kelso and Miss Hasse of the Public Gibrary were surprised at the mognitude of the show.

An enterprising woman suggests that hot air pipes run round the avenues would temper the atmosphere. Miss Beckwith, Miss Blanche Dewey Gratz Brown, W. H. Burns, Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Ejberson, Miss Mabel Brown were among the visitors. Col. and Mrs. J. H. Woodard, Mr. and Mrs. M. Dodsworth, Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Churchill, Mr. and Mrs. Fox were among last night's visitors.

COL. POLK'S WAR RECORD. The Result of Investigations Conducted

When Col. L. L. Polk, the national president of the Farmer's Alliance, was in Los Angeles, there was some talk about the gentleman's war record, brought out by his frequent references to "bridging the bloody chasm," and letting "the dead past bury its dead." It appears that when Col. Polk was "in Kansas he also indulged in considerable Kansas he also indulged in considerable talk of like nature, and invited an investigation of his record. The invitation was accepted, and the result is anything but favorable to Col. Polk.

The following special dispatch of date Wichita, Kan., September 16, shows how Col. Polk is regarded in that city; Col. L. L. Polk, president of the National Farmers' Alliance, makes a point in his address of denying the stories of his inhumanity to Union soldiers, and denies that the ever held rank above a third lleutenamy and could, therefore, never have been in The even held rank above a third lieutenancy and could, therefore, never have been in authority at any post. Mr. McAllister, a veteran of this city, who was in Salisbury prison, N. C., when Polk was Governor, holds a sick parole signed by L. L. Polk, Brigadier-General commanding the post, and gives the Alliance leader the blackest reputation for his conduct to Union prisoners. A score or so of old soldiers got together today and perfected plans for applying tar and feathers to Polk before he should leave town tonight, but somehow news of their intention leaked out and the police took steps to prevent the projected assault.

The Wichita Eagle, in connection with the above dispatch, under the head of "Peanut Polk and Union Prisoners," also prints the following letter from J. B. Culver, giving further details of the Colonel's record, in reply to the latter's invitation to hunt it up:

Just before leaving Wichita L. L. Polk invited me to hunt up his record while at the Elisworth reunion. I took particular pains to do so. This is a part of it, which I hope will be an eye-opener to some of the old solwill be an eye-opener to some of the old soldiers of the Alliance, especially by prisoners of war. At Elisworth on October 11, 1891, I met W. A. J. Hill, who said he had lived in that place eight years. He said: "I was a member of Co. D. Twenty fourth lowa infantry, and was captured at Cedar Creek, Va., October 10, 1864; was taken to Libby prison; remained there one month, then was transferred to Salisbury, N. C., and confined in the stockade. About the middle of December, 1864, I got into an argument with one of the guards concerning the dead line. He made the remark that I was too close to the line, and if I did not get back he would shoot me. While we were disputing Lieut. Col. L. L. Polk, then in command of Salisbury prison, was on his rounds of inspection, with all the pomp and strut of a turkey grobbler, which was his usual gait. He halted near the guard. The guard reported our conversation, with the remark: "There goes the little devil now." I was making good my escape, for I expected a shot. When about three or four rods away, and near the sink, which was an open place. Polk raised his revolver and expected a shot. When about three or four rods away, and near the sink, which was an open place. Polk raised his revolver and fired. The shot passed obliquely over my shoulder, the ball striking another man, who fell in the sink, and I did not know what became of him as I got away as fast as I could for fear he would shoot again. I can produce several witnesses, now living, who will say that just such occurrence happened in the Salisbury prison, under the command of Brevet Lieut. Col. L. L. Polk, and, in my opinion, he deserved to share the fate in my opinion, he deserved to share the fate

"I have this to say, that W. A. J. Hill of Ellsworth, is a gentleman of good address, well educated and every way a man whose statements are to be believed. And now, old soldier and comrade, if you must belong to the Alliance party, in the name of humanity, wash your hands of such men as old Peanut Polk of North Carolina, as he is called there." called there

The Exhibition Brought to an End Last Evening.

The Closing Remarks by State For ester W. S. Lyon. Fruits and Flowers to be Given to the Orphans.

Another Exhibition to be Given Early in the Spring—Some of the More Nota-ble Displays—Rare Trees and Plants.

The exhibition of the Horticultural Society at Hazard's Pavilion, which closed last night, was one of the most interesting displays of the kind that has ever been held in this city, and great credit is due to those, to whose enter-prise its unqualified success is due. Its chief attraction lay not so much in the profusion of the floral exhibits, or in the artistic manner in which the plants were arranged, as in the unusual interest aroused by toe variety of most of the exhibits, which were apparently altogether unknown to the majority of the visitors.

He also stated that extra efforts would be put out to present a great collection of California. sent a great collection of California wild flowers and show up the beauties of our native flora in a way never before

He then briefly set forth the aims and purposes of the society, that they were in the field to continue as agents to develop and foster a taste for the beautiful, to build up sesthetic homes and to expand to the uttermost the latent possibilities of our soil and climate in the way of flowers, fruit and trees. The Nevadillo olives are nearly ripe, showing that this

The exhibit of Richard Gird, of the The exhibit of Richard Gird, of the Chino Rancho, attracted considerable attention on account of the interest centered in beet sugar factories and the cultivation of the sugar beet at the present time. The display consisted of samples of refined beet sugar from the chino Valley sugar factory, and also a fine showing of sugar beets of several different varieties.

Byron O. Clark had on exhibition some Acme (Hale's Seedling) lemons that were worthy of mention. This varieties are the several difference of the severa that were worthy of mention. qualities. Recent experiments with the Acme lemon, budded on orange root, where the tree has commenced to bear, have yielded a very excellent fruit. The tree is an upright grower of good habit, and nearly thornless, an advantage over the Lisbon (which it very much resembles) that growers will readily ap-preciate. an institution of such importance is an event of no small moment to a community like this, so that the "recognition day" exercises held yesterday afternoon at the University building were highly in accord with the fitness of things.

It was an occasion of recognition on the part of the people of Pasadena of the great work which Father Throop has here inaugurated. By 3 o'clock the large room on the first floor, which will be used as a chapel and for public receptions, was througed with visitors. A platform erected on the south side of the room was prettily decowith visitors. A platform erected on the south side of the room was prettily decorated with a profusion of chrysanthemums. Father and Mrs. Throop and their danghter, who came from Chicago especially to be present at the opening of the University, together with several members of the faculty, received the guests, who were hearty in their expression of good will and faith in the prosperity of the institution.

After the big, building had been thoroughly inspected, brief exercises of great interest were held in the chapel. Prof. M. M. Parker, vice-president of the institution, presided. On behalf of Father Throop and the faculty, he extended a most cordial welcome to all present. Mrs. Masac, instructor of instrumental music, followed with a brilliantly executed plane solo. structor of instrumental music, followed with a brilliantly executed piano solo. After her, A. R. Metcalfe, Esq., in behalf of the citizens of Pasadena, in an eloquent address, expressed to Father Throop the heartiest appreciation of the grand work he has here inaugurated.

In behalf of the ladies of Pasadena Mrs. Jeanne C. Carr then spoke in part as follows:

Jeanne C. Carr then spoke in part as follows:

"I think it was the City of Leyden whch owed the foundation of one of the greatest European universities to a noble public sentiment. In those bloody times a signal military service had been rendered by the Dutch, and in recognition thereof they were given the choice between the foundation of a university and exempt from taxes for twenty or more years. And though the people were poor in outward wealth, they chose the university; to which the scholars of Europe flocked, and from which many of the greatest scholars' graduated for more than a century—a university still famous for its great collections and libraries, a place of pilgrimage for the lovers of learning until this day,

"Though we in Southern California are even yet a feeble folk in comparison with Holland, and though there are possibly some who doubt whether Pasadenians would be equal to such a choice. I claim that it is because we also have done our oest for education; that no other community that I know of equal in number and wealth has done as much; that this university comes to supplement and complete our public schools.

"Fifty years ago only eleven of the great fancheros who owned the five southern counties could read or sign their names; these men—the learned aristocracy. The aearest boarding school was at Honolulu in the Sandwith Islands.

We congratulate ourselves upon the birth of this university; not only for the obvious dvantages it will bring to our city, but because each new institution is another step nadvance in the recognition it gives to the ralue of practical education, viz, "that which will increase the bread-winning and ome-making power of every student." I see in the near future, as a possible compliment to Father Troop's munificent gift—the establishment here of a second chool of training in the manual arts—like gitt—the establishment here of a second ichool of training in the manual arts—like that which makes Chicago today so pre-emment among cities in the scope of her educational work. This will complete and perfect our city's claim to pre-eminence as the nost desirable for families seeking homes where nature and all the multiplied advantages of civilized life work together to crette an ever-progressive social State."

Miss Ellen Beach Yaw, instructor of votal music, who attained such a signal success at the Treble Clef concert in Los Angews, took the audience by storm in a solowhich well illustrated the remarkable compass and purity of her voice.

Rev. C. E. Harris followed in a happy adress expressive of the well-wishes of the clergymen of town. Mr. Harris possesses the faculty of blending humor with sentiments of deep feeling, and his address elicelergymen of town. Mr. Harris possesses the faculty of blending humor with sentiments of deep feeling, and his address elictled a great deal of enthusiasm. After another solo by Mrs. Masac, Father Throop was called upon to speak.

The appearance on the platform of the renerable philanthropist was the signal for unbounded applause. His remarks made a deep impression upon all his hearers, teeming full as they were of the sincerity, whole heartedness and common sense which always characterize his utterances. After a long life of over eighty years, which had numbered many happy days, he thought the present was the happiest day of all.
After a period of some years in Pasadena he had been impressed with the intelligence, the morality and the Christianity of the community. He had, after a long life of activity and industry, been able to lay aside a small amount of money. Neverhaving enjoyed the advantage of a thorough education, he apprectated the value of such all the more. Hence he determined to give his mite with the good will of his wife and daughter to the founding of an institution of learning for the benefit of the growing generation. He knew of no place so well adapted as a site for an educational center as Pasadena, so the university had been here located. It is to be an institution "free from politics and undenominational, with views as broad as the blue Pacinc, based on principles as high as yonder mountains, and as pure as the water which gushes from your rocks."
Father Throops remarks were interrupted with frequent bursts of applause.

satisfactory characters in the performance and well deserved the many compliments that were showered upon him.

W. B. Morehead had great opportunities to display his talents as a comedian in the part of "Lorenzo." His humorous propensities are unfortunately rather assumed than natural, but his singing and general interpretation of the part would have been satisfactory had he been on more intimate terms of acquaintanceship with his lines. A. S. Cates made a handsome and satisfactory prince. George H. Frost contributed largely to the evening's amusement by his novel interpretation of the part of the court physician, while H. E. Pratt as "Matteo" scored a signal success and was the recipient of at least one handsome floral token. Mrs. Frank Bromham was well adapted in voice and grace of gesture to the part of "Flannietta" and earned her full share of the applause. The chorus was strong except in one or two passages, while the singing of the pages and maids of the vivandieres and pajas brought down the house.

The opera was repeated yesterday evening.

THE MASOOT.

The Pasadena Conservatory of Opera produced the Mascot for the first time on Friday evening at the Operahouse. Perhaps not another of the many comic operas affords as much scope for the comedians to make a hit as does the Mascot, and the music is with few exceptions of a character to please the ear of the general public. In view of these facts it was a matter of some surprise that the audience on the opening night was not larger. The performance was well under way before 8:30 o'clock but it was a firer midnight before the curtain was rung down on the last act. This was cansed by almost interminable waits between the acts and a funeral style of reading their lines on the part of a few of the leading characters.

Several of the soloists achieved a decided success. O. W. Kyle was well suited to the part of "Pippo." His acting was graceful and dramatic when the occasion requires in Southern California, said, after a careful investigation of this property one and the success. O. W. Kyle was well suited to the part is best. As "Bettina." the mascot, Mrs. 'A. S. Cates bore off the honors of the evening. It was the first time she had essayed an important solo part on the operatic stage, and her spirited and allorgether charming rendition of the part in vocalism as well as histrionic ability, was a pleasant surprise even to the most enthusiastic of her friends. A City Teachers' Association has been or A city reachers' Association has been organized by Supt. Krepper to meet monthly for the purpose of discussing all topics of practical interest to the teachers and patrons. The first meeting was held in the High School Building yesterday. Supt. Krepper formulated his plans somewhat for the year, and took the ground that he wished to make no changes except they wished to make no changes except they were in the best interests of education. His ideas are modern and meet with the general approval of the teachers and irlends of education. He discards the antiqueted with the control of the con tiquated rigid "per cent," system, and be ieves in holding up before the pupil as tiquated rigid "per cent," system, and belleves in holding up before the pupil as a model "perfect manhood" to be reached as a final result.

Mr. Ostram, of the High school, read a paper in which he stated that the system of a public school was the private property of the superintendent, to be carefully guarded by every teacher. Method was the private property of the teacher, which could not be interfered with by even the superintendent unless it violated or infringed upon his system, or set at naught the objects he had in view. The personality of the teacher is the great living force of the school room. All teachers must be cautious not to carry their individuality so far as to interfere with the general plan of the superintendent, for their success is dependent upon that of the superintendent.
Miss Winchester spoke briefly about the American flag, and stated that upon certain days the flag should float over every school building in the city. Its influence is essential to patriotism.

The next association will be held in three weeks, at which time Mr. Knepper hopes to have an educator from abroad to address the teachers.

MORE ABOUT THE DEAD MAN. The Chronicle of Friday, which reached here yesterday contained another column article about the unknown dead man recently found in front of a saloon in San Francisco. The article was headed "Odd Sequel to Mrs. Pons's Mistake." The article relates how a lady had called on Mrs.
Pons, after reading the miserable story referred to in this column yesterday, and giving an account of how that lady had mistaken an unknown dead body as that of her husband. The caller professed to know who the unknown was, but later decided hat she was, mistaken, after visiting the article about the unknown dead man re that she was mistaken after visiting the morgue and conversing with the officers there.

The article and portraits of the unknown and Louis Roll in The Times yesterday, attracted a good deal of, attention here where Roll was well known.
All concede the strong resemblance between the shoemaker and the unidentifled deceased.

Speaking of others who had become interested in the search for some clew to the identification of the dead man, the Chronical search.

identification of the dead man, the Chronicle says:
 "Inquiry was made at the morgue last evening, when Clerk Bridgeway said that a lady and gentleman called on Wednesday afternoon and asked to see the portrait of the supposed Pons, at the same time producing that of their missing brother-in-law Both Mr. Bridgeway and the callers at his place of business at once declared that the portraits were not those of the same man. The papers and pocketbook of the alleged Pons proved unidentifiable, while the badge, instead of being one of the Knights of Pythias, proves to be a Hoboken (N. Y.) fire department one. The name of the missing man is Charles Moquine. The identity of the buried man is still a mystery."

A CAT IN HIS "GRIP."

Girl Got Even with a Railroad

A good story is going the rounds among railroad men on one of most pop-ular Santa Fé conductors, and for several days past the boys have done all in their power to make the poor fellow wish he had never been born. About a week ago the "con" took dinner at a San Bernardino hotel and was waited on by an Irish girl who has only been in this country a few weeks. No one likes a joke better than this particular railroad man, who is called Jim by his bosom friends, and when he observed how green the girl was he made up his mind to have some fun at her expense. He had in his pocket a lot of yellow ribbon, and, knowing that the girl was from a section where this particular color is hated worse than poison, he gave his order, and as soon as the girl's back was turned he began to decorate everything in sight. Just as he was finishing his work the girl returned and caught him in the act.

She was so angry that she could hardly see, but she promised to get even, and she did.

Last Wednesday Jim again visited the country a few weeks. No one likes a even, and she did.

Last Wednesday Jim again visited the eating-house, and as he wished to run over to Riverside and did not care to take his "grip" with him heleft it with the girl, having forgotten all about her promise to get even.

He returned the next day and took his train for Los Angeles after having thanked the girl for taking care of his grip.

On the train he was surrounded by half a dozen friends, and in the midst of a good story a cat was heard mewing as if in distress. The coach was searched, but the cat could not be found.

searched, but the cat could not be found. It kept up its noise, much to the disgust of the crowd, until Los Angeles was reached, when the party started down town. Jim carried his grip in his hand, and the crowd had not taken many steps when the cat again opened fire. At first the boys thought Jim's grip was haunted, but when he opened it out jumped a cat that seemed to be on the verge of starvation and dashed off as fast as it could run. Jim thought it a pretty good joke run. Jim thought it a pretty good joke until he examined his linen and found that Mr. or Mrs. Cat had ruined at least $30 worth of shirts, collars and neck-ties. He is of the opinion that the Irish girl who put the cat in his valise is more than even.

CAIRO ON A "TEAR."

And Our Two Californians Saw the Show.

It was the Sacred Carpet That Caused the Rumpus.

Brought from Meeca and the Tomb of the Prophet. Three Hundred Thousand Frenzied Arab

Have a High Old Time-A Scene Long to be Remembered.

CAIRO (Egypt,) Oct. 4, 1891.—[Special Correspondence of THE TIMES.]
Cairo has been on a regular "tear" for a week. You see the Holy Carpet has arrived from Mecca, and the Arabs are simply crazy. This carpet is a most interesting thing to contemplate, and the service every year has grown to such enormous proportions that it commands the attention of the whole civilized world. This carpet is not an old carpet, world. This carpet is not allow carpet, as is generally supposed, but a new one is made every year for this service, of which I will tell you. Expensive? Well, rather! It takes a whole year to make it, and when it is finished, it stands out a marvel of fine silver and gold thread, worked into beautiful designs and the whole containing many beautiful pearls, rubies and other precious stones. To be sure. these stones are preserved from year to year, and placed on every new carpet, but the body of the carpet is new every year. This new carpét is taken to Mecca, where is

THE TOMB OF MAHOMET, the prophet, and spread over his grave e it remains for two months, and is then brought to Cairo again, where all this hubbub is kicked up.

I wish you might have seen these Arabs the day this carpet arrived.
They woke me at 6 o'clock in the morning, parading the streets in front of my hotel, and they kept that parade up all day long, and have hardly stopped since. One brass band after another, followed by one of the priests (who accompanied the carpet to Mecca,) and a howling multitude have kept the city in an uproar. However, the carpet was finally taken to

THE CITADEL OF CAIRO, where it has since been divided among the priests and a few favored Arabs. I was favored with a seat among the foreign consuls, close by the side of the great priest who received the carpet on its return, and therefore had a line its return, and therefore had a fine view of the whole proceedings. When I arrived at the citidel the carpet had not arrived, but I was not long kept waiting. Promptly at 9 o'clock the Governor of Cairo and escort arrived at the building, and a salute of ten guns was fired. Then came the foreign consuls. American, French, British, etc., and the trouble began. Therewere 1000 Arab soldiers frawn up in line, and a fine, manly-looking set they were in their white uniforms and red turbans. Then there were 100 lancers on horseback, with their gorgeous colored flags, the artillery and about 300,000 Arabs.

GREAT SCOTT!

GREAT SCOTT! What a performance they did have!

The carpet came in on a camel and was put up in the shape of a pyramid, only one side left open. Then came the priests who accompanied it to Mecca, and all of their retainers, each on a camel. They were beating drums or blowing some hideous wind instruments, and to say that camels and men were in gorgeous costumes, scarcely the magnificent truth. approaches the magnificent truth. As soon as the carpet came a royal salute of twenty-one guns was fired, the lancers dismounted, the soldiers "fell in," and a din commenced such as I had never heard. Cannons firing, bands playing, and 300,000 Arabs crazy as could be made something of a row. All this in honor of the prophet.

and trouble. Not only this, but they believe if they can only touch the priest's robe it is a sure cure for all ilis. It is really pitiful to see these Arabs when once they get to touch the carpet. once cover their faces heir hands, strike the chest and kiss time and again the hand that touched the carpet. They can be seen all along the streets along which the carpet passes, going through this performance. If one is so fortunate as If one is so fortunate as to receive but a small thread, he at once encloses it in a small leather bag, ties it around his neck, and from that time on he is not only satisfied that he will have all he may desire, but is sure of everlasting life in the world to come.

I got the chief janissary to the American consul to get me a piece of this carpet. He is a Mohammedan, but his carpet. He is a Mohammedan, but his long association with American consuls has made him somewhat Christianized. It was only, however, after repeated promises on my part that I would never use it as a matter of ridicule, that he consented to give it to me. #### THE UNSPEAKABLE MUMMY.

Contents of the Pyramids, Including the CAIRO (Egypt,) Oct. 2, 1891.—[Special Correspondence of THE TIMES.] Will you have something of Alexandria before we start on "Cairo and the Pyr-

Alexandria has a fine climate, but so has California and Los Angeles in par-There are a very few fine modern buildings in the city, but the view of these buildings is not pleasing, inasmuch as there is always some old tumble-down ruin by the side of them. These old ruins are the remains of buildings that suffered from the bom-bardment in 1882. For the remainder of the city—old buildings, narrow streets, Arabs in their long, colored robes and white and red turbans, fruits robes and white and red turbans, fruits of all kinds growing, Pompey's Column and the palace of the Khedive—these are all of interest to the traveler. Some of the streets are so narrow that there is only room for two persons to walk side, by side, and then the buildings on each side are (at the second story) extended out over the street, so that they are only about two feet apart. It would be well for the ladies of our American cities to make a note of this, and have their husbands build houses in the same way. It bands build houses in the same way. It would be fine if they had a little Griendly gossip to dispose of.

Pompey's Column is the only relic of interest in the city. It is built of red granite, about sixty feet high and the only record of it is that it has stood the storms of centuries. Its foundation is almost in ruins, but Alexandrians consider it a great attraction.

THE ERROIVE'S "FRONT-YARD FENCE."
The palace of the Khedive is situated on the sea, so that his front-yard fence stands in the water. If the Mediteranean had any tide his yard and house would be deluged. However, he has numerous other palaces scattered around Cairo, some of which I have had permission to go through and I will tell you of these later. This palace at Alexandria is only two stories high, built of stone and very plain. It has lots of wealth inside, though, and beautiful grounds surrounding, with tropical fruits and flowers in abundance.

We have been in Cairo one week, and it begins to feel quite like a dwelling place. On our journey here we came by the express train along the Nile. Now, there has been a great deal written and said about the Nile being so ten and said about the Nile being so beautiful and grand, and I came with the express determination to find if there was anything exaggerated about it, and if so to say it. As far as the river itself is, concerned, it is as dirty and miserable looking a stream as yon can imagine, but its mud and dirt only bring out the more clearly the beauty and grandeur of its surroundings.

ALONG THE NILE.
On either side of its winding banks are beautiful fields of green corn, ripening wheat and other grain; dates, oranges and graceful banana trees, all rapidly unfold before your eyes as the express train dashes along; and these, with the beautiful lakes left here and there from the overflow, and the long trains of camels, with their loads for the desert, make a picture as charming as one could wish. Add to this the splendid, graceful sall boats which are constantly on the River Nile and you have some of the reasons why this country is so attractive to travelers, and in fact you have the reason it is any country at all in which one could live. We must depend on the Nile for water and food, as, without the overflow, which occurs usually in August, the country would be as barren as a desert.

Cairo is a most attractive place, and is "the" winter resort of all Europe.

Even as early as October 1 the tourists begin as most attractive place, and the state of th begin coming in to look at the big city with its 400,000 people, the Pyramids, the Sphynx, tombs, mummies, mosques and numerous other attractions. They come, too, of course, to escape the hard winter for which Europe is no notorious. MOUNTING THE PYRAMIDS.

Of course when we first arrived here, like everyone else, we went to the Pyr amids. These old tombs one never tires looking at. Read what you like These old tombs one never of them, you are always glad to see more. And well you may be. There is nothing so calculated to knock your senses endways as these Pyramids. The largest one covers about five acres at as could be made something of a largest one covers about five acres at the base, which is plenty large enough, without saying thirteen acres, as some of earlier in the base, which is plenty large enough, without saying thirteen acres, as some leving if they could but touch it they were not only sure of heaven, but had received a sovereign cure for every ill and trouble. Not only this, but they belong the some of this outside coating has tumbled down, and here and there are breaks in the rock, so that by taking two native guides, ONE TO PUSH AND THE OTHER TO PULL one can reach the top. When we reach one can reach the top. When we reach the top, however, we feel very poorly paid for realing our bones and lives, for if the guide should look his hold one second, you would be ground into powder by the time you struck terra firma.

The most interesting part of this Pyramid is undoubtedly the inside, but be mid is undoubtedly the inside, but be sure you have two good strong natives to push and pull, a good square meal and a strong pair of legs before entering. Your strenth will be tried to the uttermost. First, we must climb up the outside at least fifty feet to the opening. This opening is nothing more than a square hole in the solid rock, about 2x5 Overhead is the keystone, show feet. Overhead is the keystone, showing that these people who built it knew something of the "arch and keystone" as well as we. As soon as we are inside we at once begin a steep descent (at an angle of 45°, I should think). This descent is a narrow passage, hemmed in by solid blocks of granite, polished as smooth as glass itself. The granite under our feet has small niches cut regularly in it for steps, but they were evidently cut for bare feet, as they are round, and a leather shoe sole won't round, and a leather shoe sole won't "stick." After going down this steep descent for about 100 feet, we are told by our Arab guides to "mind our head," and find ourselves at an opening barable large ground to gray the work. head," and nin ourselves at an opening barely large enough to crawl through. Then after going through this small opening we stand up again to find ourselves in a passage fifty feet high and six feet wide. This, too, is all granite, and the huge stones are so snugly fitted together that you must hold your candle very closely to distinguish where they are joined. This passage ascends at as steep an angle as the other descends. After going up about half the length of the passage we came to what apparently was a solid wall, but my guide took my hand, and, placing it above my head at a certain point, I felt a "hand holt". Then he showed me a foot holt, telling me to be careful and place the right foot there, for if I placed the left I could not find the passage on the right when I got up. Think of these ancients handling granite in such a manner! How easily could one manner. parely large enough to crawl through these ancients handling granite in such amanner! How easily could one man keep back an army as long as he could have provisions. Once at the top of this wall he could keep back his foes, for only one could come up at a time. When I reached the top of this wall and followed the passage along I found myself at the end, the room containing the sarcophagus. This stone coffin is now empty; in fact, it was empty when first discovered by the Egyptians, showing the pyramid had been entered centuries ago and closed again. The coffin is one piece of black granite, eight feet long, three feet high and two and one-half feet thick. It and two and one-half feet thick. It was consequently put into the pyramid before its completion, as it would not go through the narrow passages with their abrupt turns. The room containing the sarcophagus is thirty feet high, twenty long and twelve wide. It is all of finely polished black granite, as smooth as glass itself. One stone in the wall of this room is twenty feet in length, six feet ten inches thick and six feet in depth. I presume modern in length, six feet ten inches thick and six feet in depth. I presume modern ingenuity could place it at its height above ground, (about one hundred feet) but what a lot of hydraulic engines, and what an enormous amount of expense and "cussing" would be necessary. One thing is sure, it could not be done better. The sole idea seems to have been in building these pyramids, to construct a tomb in which the bones of the King could rest and not be stolen by enemies. The Queen's comin is much like the King's, only in another room 100 feet below. How much outside work covers this granite is un-100 feet below. How much work covers this granite is unknown, but presumably the pyramids are all built of this fine granite, and only one outside coating and only one outside coating twenty feet in thickness encases this wenty feet in thickness encases this vast area of granite, extending, in the one pyramid alone, over about five acres. The Arabs are constantly diging up, among the rubbish of these pyramids, old stockings filled with coppyramids, old stockings filled with copper coins and stone images (mostly cats and beetles,) and they get considerable revenue from tourists for this sort of dead game. The Egyptian government is very strict about these things leaving the country, and well they may be, for No ANTIQUITIES, NO EQYPT. Through the kindness of the American consul, however, I have secured permission from the "Director-General of Antiquities" to remove anything in the relic line I to remove anything in the relic may come in possession of. I might say at home had much to do with influenc-ing the consul and director-general. This permission must in turn be signed by the Khedive. So you may look for an interesting collection when we re-

Near this great pyramid of which have written are the alabaster tombs, formerly containing all the well-preerved mummies of the old kings

These mummies are now in the Ghizel museum at this place, and I will tell you of them further on. I suppose in America we would consider ourselves fortunate to have a nice pin made of ala-baster, but here in these tombs are solid pieces 16 feet in length and 8 in neight and 2 in thickness. So clear is this beautiful stone that our guide held a candle between a stone 8 feet through and we could clearly distinguish the light. Of course it is perfectly dark in these catacombs, so that the light could be distinguished better. Some of these one distinguished better. Some of these underground passages are half a mile in length, with openings at the side for containing the mummles. It took all sorts of scheming and bribing to get a piece of this fine alabaster, as the government is very strict about preserving in toto these combs; but we got ill Of course after viewing these touts you naturally want to see what was in them. So we drove to the museum where the mummles are at present on I must say that I was considerably lisappointed in the appearance of these

We read marvelous stories about their preservation, and especially how natural they look. This is all "rot." That the bodies are preserved at all is, of course, wonderful; but the mummy of Rameses II, and the one they are all harping on, does not strike me as looking very "natural." In the me as looking very "natural." In the first place, his face is black as the ace of spades, only one or two small spots on the skin, about the size of a silver quarter, looking anything like a nat ural color. Bre'r Rameses' residue re minded me of the black man who minded me of the black man who is turning white, that you see in the dime museums, only he had not so much white and a good deal more black, and finer quality. I send you his photo; which he presented with his compliments, after paying 8 piasters, (40 cents.) The museum has a "corner" on his photo and won't allow it to be sold by common photographers.

sold by common photographers. AN INTERVIEW WITH RAMESES II.
I said to him, "Well, Ramy, old boy, how are you? Are you the son-of-a-gun they kick up such a fuss over? did you get that nose? What's the matter with your neck? Is that fungus growth on the back of your head called hair?" To all of which he head called hair?" To all of which he answered not a word. He was too old about three thousand years, I think. He must have been sick a long time, for

There are lots of other mummies there, but all are of about the same there, but an are or about the same breed. They are, or were all formerly, incased in wooden coffins, the top of each bearing an exact representation of the features of the occupant. Then this was placed in the sarcophagus to wait for modern ingenuity to eipher it out. The top is covered with hieroglyphics with which I am unfamiliar, on account of shameful parental neglect of my early education. But there are lots of interesting things in this museum, "too nuesting things in this museum, "too nu-merous to mention," as the auctioneer says. Mummified cats, stone statues, beads and ornaments found in the cof-fins are in abundance. None of the or-naments are valuable except for an-tiquity. Small stone beetles and naments are valuable except for antiquity. Small stone beetles and a very little gold for the most part form the stock in trade. There are small stone images of the various antique gods always with them, but these are also found in abundance in every tomb. The sacred cat and sacred bull were evidently their favorites, for the dealers are "long" on these animals.

The drive out to the Pyramide is most.

The drive out to the Pyramids is mo enchanting. It is about six miles in length, with huge over-hanging limbs giving perfect freedom from the sun-rays. The road is solid, and on eithe rays. The road is solld, and on either side the water is spread out like a lake from the overflow of the Nile. We were taking our lunch from a basket while sitting under one of these fine trees, and an Arab mother and child came along. The little child was sitting astride on its mother's shoulder, and holding fact cound its mother's child. astride on its mother's shoulder, and holding fast around its mother's head, after the usual custom here. They were evidently very poor and the helpless little "kid" began to cry for our lunch. One of our number promptly gave it a large piece of bread. The child was about 15 months old and had only two teeth peeping out. It was most pitifuf to see the little heathen devour the bread, using its two front teeth. The mother was evidently very proud and happy that we should give her child something to eat, for she went away with glad tears in her eyes that her baby probably had for once all it wanted to eat.

CAPT. KING AT WEST POINT

CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES COPYRIGHT 1891, BY S. S. M'CLURE.]

The new comer to the military academy in the good old days where write and whereof some grizzled veterans are wont to brag prodigiously, had in every conceivable way an infinitely tougher time of it than he does now "The service is going to the devil," old Col. ____, in the summer of '89. "Even the plebes have silver napkinrings. Why, sir, when I entered in 183-," etc., etc. Very possibly the youthful West Pointer of today may look upon the graduates of '66 precisely as '66 looks upon '44, but there is this ways the 'academy has improved since the war days, and every boy who enters in these present piping times of peace has advantages never dreamed of in '62. If anything was ever done by the authorities to spare the feelings of the awkward, uncouth, and verdant youngsters who were licked into shape in four tremendous weeks in our time, we never found it out, and the deepest humiliations came with the drill hour before dinner and between 4 and 5 p.m. We did not mind the 5:30 a.m. drill so to be up and about, but the other two-that was mortification intensified.

ten were from the farms or country vil-lages of our wide domain. Two had been a year at Kenyon College, one at Yale and one at Columbia, making four who had a smattering, at least, of the classics. Four others had enjoyed excellent mathematical schooling in the scientific academies of New England. One was the son of a distinguished teacher in Kentucky. One more a pupil at a famous Jesuit seminary in LowerCanada. The rest had had no edu-cational advantages worth speaking of. Four of our number had seen service with the volunteers at the front. had walked barefooted from had walked barefooted from Lake Champlain to Washington to win his appointment from Mr. Lincoln and, taking it by and large, as the sailors say, of the twelve classes I have seen enter West Point, ours was by long odds the most bucolical looking of the lot.

And so our cadet instructors seemed to find us. Divided into squads of two or three we were turned over to the lender mercies of these aspirants for corporal-mercies of these aspirants for corporal-ships, whose rank on the list would de-pend on the success achieved with their respective squads. There was appar-ently only one system recognized. For-bidden to lay hands on the charges, and prohibited the use of the corporal's cane, with which the drill-masters of grim old Fritz Magnus used to flog the recruits into shape, the yearling cade relied upon a ferocity of demeanor and (Convulsions of merriment among the spectators; sympathetic checkles from Plebe Thompson on my right; 'sharp, sudden reprimand to Mr. Thompson for "laughing at the misfortunes of a classmate.") And so it would go on for ten minutes at a time, unless some officer happened along, when all would be dignity and decorum. But those three drills a day wrought

But those three drills a day wrought wonderful changes in the "setting up" and carriage of our "Johnny Raws" even before the uniforms were made. It was a point of honor with the cadet instructors to have large squads of plebes ready for guard duty by the Fourth of July. Several of our class went on guard several days before and I was one of them, and an eventful time we had of it, as a future chapter shall tell.

HOW A BOY OUTWITTED JOHN A. MURRELL.

A True Story by Maurice Thompson

[CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES-COPYRIGHT, 1891, BY S. S. M'CLURE.]

ARLY in the presthe time that Pierre Rameau and John A. Murrell were names of dread from the Ohio River to the Gulf coast, Hugh

Lennox, a youth of 17, set out on horseback to go from Vicksburg to Bay Saint Louis, where his grandparents

Hugh was tall and well-proportioned, for one of his age, and his horse, saddle and bridle were very valuable. Indeed, these and about $300 in silver money, which he carried in a leather pouch, constituted the entire estate left him at the recent death of his father and

The horse was a superb animal, strong and swift, and the saddle was a Mexican one, mounted in brass and

Hugh was advised not to undertake the journey since it would lead him near the celebrated Honey Island jungles, which were supposed to be the rendezvous of all the Mississippi and Louisiana outlaws; but he was a spirited, almost reckless boy, and would just as soon risk something for adven-ture's sake as not.

He set out armed with a long rifle and a pair of heavy pistols; his thought was to shoot some deer and perhaps a bear or two on the way. The journey, he calculated, would last from three to five days, owing to the weather and the condition of the streams.

The first day was a dreary one, al-though the sky was clear; for Hugh liked company, and to ride hour after hour all alone, now in the dusky pine woods, now past the secluded plantawoods, now past the section planta-tions and anon through plashy cypress swamps, was enough to make him feel that his trip could not be a very pleas-ant one at best.

He stayed all night at a cabin in a little clearing. The man and his wife were pleasant people. They refused to accept any pay next morning and even insisted upon giving him a little package of food for his midday luncheon.

When he had mounted his horse and was ready to set out, up rode a young, smooth-faced, dark-eyed man dressed in

"The young gentleman will no donot be glad to have your company. He's going to Bay Saint Louis, too." "Ah, indeed, that's good news. How are you, sir!" Hugh returned the preacher's greeting with due cordiality. It was very agreeable to think of having so cheery a companion for the rest of his long, ride.

The two set out bearing with them the hearty "God speed you" of the man

"My name is Foster," said the "and what is your name, my oung friend?"

"Ah, was your father Jere Lennox, of Vicksburg?

"Well, well, that's delightful! Why, your father in his lifetime was my best friend. Many a time have I been at your home when you were a little

"I'm glad to hear this," said Hugh, formal prefix.

And so, just as everything conspired to take the "bumptiousness" out of the new cadet and reduce him to a condiit on of abject humiliation, so were the late meek and lowly, our predecessors by just one year, exalted and glorified. No less than thirty-five of these glittering young gentlemen were selected to become the squad drill-masters of the class in which I entered in '62. Heavens! What a contrast between the appearance of the cadet of one year's standing and that of the candidate just reported! The former in a gray and white uniform, fitting like wax; every button glistering; collar, cuffs, trousers and gloves absolutely immaculate; figure and carriage erect, trim and graceful; every movement alert and quick, yet consumately easy. As for our array of some eighty or ninety aspirants all but about tion of abject humiliation, so were the

of the lookers on and the infinite for-ture of the poor fellows in the squads. We had drill-masters, though, gentle men born, no matter whether they came from the plow or the brickyard, who would sternly order away the little pests of garrison boys and rebuke the giggling spectators by ordering 'rest.' And—just as I am in the midst of this line comes a letter from the editor saying the first chapter had reached him and would go to press at once, but he wanted more of my "indi vidual experiences." All right. If you can stand it I can. A page will do. It had been my luck to be at Columbia College at the outbreak of the war, and to have had several months' service around Washington before being sent to the Point. Old friends in whe corps knew this, and despite their efforts it leaked out. I was as enough to be trapped into showing some yearlings what I thought I knew about the bayonet exercise. The one thing a cadet drill-master could not tolerate was a laboration of the state of the st plebe who fancied he knew anything about drill. I had been having an east was purposely transferred to that of a terror of a drill-master, who was probably instructed to devote his energies to that plebe who thought he could handle a musket. The boy in the picture—his noble young face turned slightly over his shoulder—seemed to meet the young peasant's eyes with a soft, questioning glance. For the moment it was as if they two had looked at each other almost as they might have done if they had stood face to face.
"This one," said Giovanni, after a moment's silence. "Is he the brother of the other Signorine—and where is he?"

The girl with the gray eyes laid her hand softly on his shoulder and spoke in a low voice even softer than her touch. "This one." she said, "he died three months ago."

CHAPTER IV.

Brigitta climbed slowly up the steep, the streets which were so narrow as to be mere passages between the old, old houses. Protected against the ruin of houses. Protected against the ruin of possible earthquakes by the many archways thrown across from wall to wall. It was these old houses and narrow, passage-like, steep streets and unexpected archways which gave Citta Vec-chia—which means simply the old city—its picturesqueness and made the for estieri climb up to see it so often and make sketches of corners of it. It seemed a marvelous old place to the forestieri, and during the winter season when the hotels and villas were filled with them, the peasants in the "old city" became quite used to seeing groups of two or three well-dressed people rambling about, stopping to look up the dark, narrow stone stairways, or they have been been about the stair ways, or they iron-barred windows, or delighting them selves with a tumble-down wall or a crumbling arch with green weeds sprouting out of its stones, high in the air.

The forestieri had these queer ways.
They who were rich and lived in the grand hotels and white villas and wore wonderful garments would stop and watch a serious mule or donkey, laden with faggats or sake of olives, stumwith faggats or sake of olives.

watch a serious mule or donkey, laden with faggots or sacks of olives, stumbling honestly up the hillside streets, its burden almost touching the walls on each side, and they would look as if it were a wonder and as if the peasant woman walking beside it, with her weather-worn dark face, framed with a red or yellow and green hand-terchief tied over her black hair and under her chin, as if she were a wonder too. And sometimes they had been thown to make sketches of both, as if there were not real and grand pictures there were not real and grand pictures of Madonnas and saints and angels in the fine picture galleries of the great cities they were always rambling about the world to visit. The peasants thought that all this came about because the had nothing to do and were so idle that it made them childish.

Brigitta—who was Giovanni's mothe

—did not suspect for a moment that she was picturesque. She did not know what picturesque meant. She knew the young men had called her a pretty girl years ago before she had married Cola and had had children and worked so hard. Then she had been plump and had had laughing white teeth and had had laughing white teeth and bright eyes, and there had been red on her brown cheeks and a curl in her thick hair. But now she considered herself an old woman, though she was not one as the forestieri counted years.

She had worked in the house, among the children and the beasts, she had worked at the olive harvest and the grape gathering, and had done all sorts of things on the bit of land Cola rented in the campagna, and she had grown

Hugh somehow began presently suspect that this alert, facile, dark-fac man was not just what he pretended to be. Something in his air and in the way he looked out of the corner of his narrow, straight-cut eyes, hinted of the devil-may-care and the lawless. You may trust a bright, wide-awake boy to catch quickly enough the note of insin cerity in a man's nature, give him half a chance. Hugh felt that this young preacher had some, ulterior object in his familiarity, that was not quite hon-

Suddenly, just before nightfall, it became plain that Foster desired to decoy him away from the right road to Bay Saint Louis. In his earlier boyhood Hugh had been over the road with his latter, and now when they came to a father, and now when they came to a place where it divided, he recollected the spot well and knew that the left the spot well and knew that the left-hand trail was the direct way; but Fos-ter insisted that they should take the other. This Hugh kindly but peremp-torily refused to do, inwardly hoping that his companion would, on this ac-count, take leave of him on the spot. Foster, however, after some discussion

For some reason conversation nearly ceased between them, and they rode along listening to the bellowing of the along listening to the bellowing of the alligators in the dismal swamps. Denser and denser grew the forests. Night began to fail over the widerness, and there was not a sight or sound that suggested a human habitation within miles of the silent, thoughtful travelers.

At last it grew so dark that they could scarcely follow the road, which here was but a mere trail. Foster was in front, and when he reached a spot where a fine spring flowed out at the foot of a huge gum tree he halted and proposed that they stop for the night.

By this time Hugh flad made up his mind that he was to be robbed, and that this so-called Parson Foster was no other, in reality, than John A. Murrell, the famous robber. This conjecture Murten, only three days before this, had "held up" a man who had just sold ten negroes; now he was on his way to Honey Island, and it was his purpose to rob Hugh of his horse and money and leave him to finish his journey to Bay St. Louis on foot.

Our young friend's watchful eyes had detected a brace of heavy and superbly mounted pistols in the saddle-bags of Foster. Of course, in those wild days a Foster. Of course, in those wild days a preacher might bear arms for self-defense; but Hugh thought these pistols in some way looked as if they had been used a good deal. It was a disturbing thought for a mere boy to more than suspect that he was far away in the woods with the boldest and most unscrupulous outlaw that ever lived in America; but boys were reared to danger in those times, and Hugh was as brave as a lion. brave as a lion.

Hugh felt cold beads of sweat break forth on his forehead, and for a moment he was powerless; the next, however, a fit of desperation seized him, and he did what of all thing would have appeared in his cooler moments the most foolish. He leveled his rifie on the robber and fired, then flung it away and drew both his pistols, at the same time spurring his horse forward at full speed and yelling like a savage.

Murrell for once in his life was taken by surprise, and, so swift came down upon him the charging horse and boy, he wheeled from the path to avoid a collision. THE AMERICAN RUGBY GAME AS IT IS NOW PLAYED.

N the articles which I am to write I shall aim to give my read ers a clear under standing of American Rugby football as it is now played. A most interesting article might be wri ten on thehistory and development of the game, but it will be of more practical value, both to those who witness contests and to those who are learning to play, to confine these papers to the points of the play. We will now seek to get a the play. We will now seek picture of the game before us.

Let us imagine that the field is properly laid out according to the rules of the game; that we have a rectangular piece of level land 330 feet long by piece of level land 330 feet long by 160 feet wide, inclosed by heavy lime lines; that at distances of five yards lengthwise of this fleid are other well-defined parallel lines, the fifth from either end being indicated by a special mark, as the "twenty-live" yard line, and the middle point of the eleventh line as the "center" of the field; that midway on the boundary lines of the short side of the field goal posts are erected, with standards 20 feet high and 18 feet 6 inches from each other. and 18 feet 6 inches from each other, connected 10 feet from the ground by connected 10 feet from the ground by a crossbar. We are now ready to consider the

we are now ready to consider the players themselves. Twenty-two men are necessary to play the game properly, eleven on a side, the same as in the English game of cricket. Seven of these, called the "rushers" or "forwards" stand opposing a corresponding seven of the opposite eleven whenever the hall is down "for a scrimmage." the ball is down "for a scrimmage. The other four occupy positions varying according to whether they or their opponents have the ball, and are called the "backs." The names of each posithe "backs." The names of each stand in a scrimmage are given below

Let us now consider the makeup of an eleven more closely. An eleven could very probably be divided into four disvery probably be divided into four distinct parts, each part composed of players who have similar duties. The rush line. If we an army, is made up of a center and two wings. The center is composed of the center rusher, the right and left guard and the quarter back. Each wing is made up of a tackle and an end rusher. The two half backs and the full back, who formerly was the goal-keeper, but who is now practically a keeper, but who is now practically a third half back, made another division.

The center, like the center of an army, also is the strength of the eleven, the backbone of the team. If weak here an eleven can not be strong either offensively, when they have the ball, or defensively, when they have the ball, or defensively, when it is in possession of their opponents. For this reason, hardy, powerful men are always selected to fill the position of the center rusher and right and left guard. It is from the center that the contract the second of the center that the cent from the center that every scrim-mage starts, the center rusher putting mage starts, the center rusher putting the ball in play by rolling it back on the ground between the legs to the quarter back, who can not run forward with it, and is therefore forced to pass it on to a third man. ever, sufficiently to light the wood at hand, and he laid down the bags to go search for some drier bark and twigs.

Hugh's moment had come. As quick as a flash, almost, he slipped out Murrell's pistols, opened their pans, and spilt their priming. This well done he replaced the weapons. His next move was to feel around in the bags and find the powder flask, which was a small curately, and the half backs, if they receive it, are likely to be downed in their tracks. In picking a center rusher, the one physical property sought for besides weight and strength, is the ability to stand filmly on his feet and so be able to snap the ball back accurately and at a uniform rate of speed. A little ununiform rate of speed. A little un-steadiness under the annoyance of a tricky opponent will cause the quarter back a deal of trouble in handling the balk, and be very likely to result in some very bad fumbling. There are two methods of standing in snapping the ball, one introduced by Princeton a few years ago, where one foot is placed behind for a brace and the ball is snapped back a little to one side: the other weed almost entirely by Vale, where used almost entirely by Yale, where both feet are widely spread for interference with opponents breaking through, and at the same time to avoid getting in the way of the ball, which can be snapped straight back.

A wise center rusher will also make a study of the best way of snapping the ball back and then hold the ball the same way-every time. Yale holds the ball on the small end in snapping it ponent will have less opportunity for interfering with the ball, which can be sent back very fast almost without effort and in such a way that the quarter back catches the ball in the air all ready to pass it. Harvard prefers to lay the ball down flat so that it is rolled along the ground to a point where it is will have less opportunity with greater liability for interference on the part of the opposing center rusher.

If the Yale method of snapping the ball is followed the ball should not be held squarely on the end, but leaning forward at an angle of about 60 or 70 degrees. This angle seems the easiest for holding the ball steadily with one hand and the same time a comparatively slight pressure backward will send the ball with considerable speed.

Shrewdness and trickery can best be:

[CONTRIBUTED TO THE TIMES—COPYRIGHT, 1891, BY S. S. M'CLURE.] Shrewdness and trickery can best be met by shrewdness and trickery, and the ideal center rusher is the possessor of both. He must know how to keep from being successfully bothered when he has the ball and at the stme time be will (b) in bothering are research. skillful in bothering an opponent when it is in the hands of that individual.

The main work of the guards may be ammed up as blocking, that is, in guarding," as their name indicates, "guarding," as their name indicates, the quarter-back until he has passed the ball; making openings for the passage tab ball; making openings for the passage of a runner whenever certain signals are given; breaking through the line to interfere with the quarter-back in pass-ing the ball or to tackle the runner, or to stop a kick. The guards, with the center rusher, have the most laborious positions on the eleven if they fulfill their duties.

They must bear the brunt of the heavy plunging through the center by the opponents, who usually mass on that play, while at the same time they play, while at the same time they struggle to break through the opposing line, which is doing its utmost to prevent them. Then, as soon as their side has the ball, they are expected to use their strength and wits in blocking and making openings and interfering for the player who is attempting a run. Further, they have to little time to catch their wind when a play is beto catch their wind when a play is being made around the end for almost the first point which is pounded into their brains by the daily criticism of the captain or coach is always to be on hand the second the ball is down, to make or the second the ball is down, to make or to prevent a quick play. It can truly be said that no team is well trained until the center part of the eleven as indeed the whole team, is timely on this point. While the center has all this hard work only occasionally do the players have a chance to distinguish the prayers aither have a player. themselves either by a run or a clean tackle or a fine interference which is apparent to the untrained eye of the spectator. On the other hand, it does not take very much yielding at the center to bring forth the criticism from the audience that the center is weak.

CHAPTER VII.

It was indeed true that King Clarimond had abruptly received tidings which told him his mother had just crossed the Saltravian frontier. Between the Princess and himself rela-tions of a most frosty character had existed for several years. Few people, owever, remained long on good terms with the Princess. Her disposition was merely over-bearing; it brimmed with all the worst bigotries of the Dark Ages, and to say of her that she be-lieved in the "divine rights of kings" would have been mildly to express mental savagery. The course of her son and only child, Clarimond, had almost maddened her since his accession to the throne. She had detested his father, her first husband, the Arch-Duke Conrad, and in Clarimond she saw the paternal traits accentuated made more hideous, more nauseating Conrad had presumed in her presence to air his loathsome republican doc-trines, and his early death had seemed to her like a heavenly vengeance for such audacity. Marrying soon after-ward an old Italian prince of great wealth and extreme conservatism, she again became a widow before it even vaguely entered her head that the son whom she had left with his tutors and guardians in Saltravia stood the remotest chance of ever being King. The Princess adored Italy, and shrank from the cares of motherhood. Besides, were not Conrad's people taking charge of the boy and his enormous fortune? But suddenly, when the sick old King lost his heir by a lightning stroke of lost his heir by a lightning-stroke of disease, and when only two other lives could be counted on between himself and the successon, Hildegarde, Princess of Brindisi, began to feel her spirit cess of Brindisi, began to feel her spirit dilate with a haughty hope. For those two other heirs—had they not been sickly from their cradles, and was not one of them a fragile girl with a pulmonary ill of stubborn menace?

The girl died within a year after her brother, and the old King, who deeply loved her, became almost an imbecile through this double bereavement. Then tidings were brought the Princess in Naples that her son might soon inherit the rule of Saltravia, as both the reigning monarch and his last-left child were both at the point of death. It was now that she hurried to her own child, whom she had seen only at interlong an absence, must be greeted with due and prompt honors. As for honors military, these, at such an hour, were next to impossible. A cortége of royal coaches and a fairly copious escort, the annoyed Clarimond soon caused to be prepared. But as a consequence of what she choose to consider his mortifying rudeness, the Princess was driven to the palace in one of her most supercilious furies.

At first, during the homeward drive, she would scarcely speak to her son. Beside her sat a beautiful young girl of a very pronounced blonde type, named Bianca d'Este, allied to the illustrious race who bear what name. The Princess had recently induced this young lady to become her chief companion, and with that motive it was only too plain. In one of her recent letters to Clarimond she had overly written.

plain. In one of her recent letters to Clarimond she had openly written: "I have added to my household the most charming of girls, Bianca d' Este.

"I have added to my household the most charming of girls, Blanca d' Este. In lineage she is your equal, for her blood is not merely royal but very ancient as well. I should love to see herseated at your side on the throne of Saltravia; and it is high time you married, as you must surely admit."

Clarimond was not the man to be either coerced or counselled on matrimonial questions. He had never yet seen the woman whom he would have taken any great joy in making his wife, but he had seen at least four or five who might, even to his fastidious taste, have worn the crown of queenly consort with satisfying distinction.

As he now let his eye rest on Bianca d' Este's plump yet dignified figure and creamy, pink-and-white face, he felt no stir of interest whatever. She was undoubtedly a handsome girl, but behind such a look as hers there could not lie the intelligence which alone makes woman's beauty otherwise than a mere pastime of the senses to men; and our woman's beauty otherwise than a mere pastime of the senses to men; and our young King was a man who had never shown his senses very much respect, a fact which something in the silvery gray of his eyes and in the lines of his clear-molded chin went strongly to prove. Meanwhile, as the great state-carriage rolled onward through the mellow summer darkness, and by the rays of the outside lamp, which illumined it he could distintly view this young Italian lady, he told himself, almost with weariness, that if his mother should insist and importune after that fashion of doing both in which she so notably excelled, he might yield to her and let the cherished nuptials really take place.

celled, he might yield to her and let the cherished nuptials really take place.

The Princess of Brindisi was a woman who rarely kept silent, even from sulkiness, longer than ten minutes at a time. Before the journey had been half accomplished she broke in upon a civil commonplace which her son was addressing to Bianca. So filled with bitterness were her words that Bianca's vals, and in a bored, perfunctory way, during the past decade.

But Clarimond, taking the reins of government at an age when his wrists were quite sinewy enough to hold them, had no sympathy with his mother's dictates and desires. To the Princess his views, his tendencies, his avowals, were a mingled amazement and disgust.

"I am covered with remorse and shame," she would say to her intimates, "that this rebel against all the most sacred customs and precedents of roysacred customs and precedents of royalty should actually be my son! He will bring Saltravia to the verge of ruin; he will infuriate the Emperor; he will compromise himself past remedy, and plunge me into untold embarrasssments."

Her new position had caused her to surround herself with a suite of ladies and gentlemen in waiting. There are always people ready to play sycophants for those on whom a throne has cast its shadow, and if she had chosen to organize a political party in opposition to her son the task would not have been difficult. But in spite of her indignant disapproval she shrant from such a course. After all, though a cousin twice removed of the Emperor whom she so professed to venerate, her new greatness had come to her from Clarimond alone. For a good while she remained in Saltravia, treated with faultless though somewhat sarcastic defermained in Sairravia, treated with faint-less though somewhat sarcastic defer-ence by the son whom she had so long neglected, and then angered into hys-teria by his new intimacy with a young adventuring American architect who was to demolish all the old-time halstructures and rear horrible lowed structures and rear horrible brand-new ones in their place, she gathered her little household about her and fied to her beloved Italy.

The King, who had remained courteous as he was obdurate, simply shrugged his shoulders at her departure, and breathed a long sigh of relief.

"She is incorrigible," he said to Eric, "and I find her as hard to argue with as if she had been a figure that had stepped forth from one of my precious bits of antique tapestry, coif on head and hawk on wrist. I shall continue to act just as if she had never annoyed me by her curious worm-eaten prejudices, and I shall write her regularly, once a month, letters full of the most once a month, letters full of the most duteous filial sentiments."

This resolve Clarimond faithfully carried out. The Princess, meanwhile, though she had retreated, had not given up her battle. She was secretly agitated by a dread that her son would make some terrible democratic marriage; for he had already shocked her by asserting that he thought morganatic unions revolting, and even criminal and there was no written law in his nal, and there was no written law in his nal, and there was no written law in his little realm against a sovereign wedding whomsoever he chose.

Repeatedly, of late months, the Princess had written her intention of coming to see the new palace. Her son had given courteous assent to this arrangement, while inwardly groaning at the rearest of ceremony, and punctilion. ment, while inwardly groaning at the parade of ceremony and punctilio which it would be certain to engender. Now at last, after many false alarms, a teiegram had abruptly come to him, stating that she had reached a small town about three miles distant, and there awaited his presence. It was then a little after nightfall. The King, who was just seating himself at dinner, gave a depayiring sigh. There seemed gave a despairing sigh. There seemed to him the most studied kind of mischief in this entire proceeding. But of course her entrance into the kingdom, after so itself, lately raised to power, had pre-sented this piteous excuse!" "I did not mean it for an excuse," came Clarimond's cold answer; and he threw himself back against the cushions of the carriage, disheartened, dis-

From this ambuscade of shadow he could watch his mother, on whom the lamplight fell with somewhat cruelly telling ardor. She had not markedly telling ardor the long interval which had preceded their last meeting. Her figure was still of that fine if somewhat too masculine moulding which had won her, years ago, many a compliment at the court of her imperial cousin. Her face was just as firmly chiseled as of old, with its aquiline arc of nostril and tis over-full eyebrows too closely set together, implying both narrowness of judgment and a voluble art of defending it. Her hands, now cased in sombre traveling gloves, just as her form was robed in a dark traveling gown of perfect it, ratained their happy grace of feet fit, retained their happy grace of gesture, not too reposeful, not too em-phatic. "I kiss the most beautiful hand in Europe," a famous conqueror had once said to her, and the courtesy had echoed from court to court. But on her chill lips awelt the old insolent on her can hips dweit the old insolent curve, though a few subtle little wrin-kles had crept in dainty mockery about their corners. Her hair, once abundant and dark-shining, was visibly thinned and silvered at the temples. Otherwise and silvered at the temples. Otherwise she continued to be the Princess of Brindisi, distinguished in every movement of her frame, an incarnate quintessence of the aristocratic idea, redolent of pride, intolerance and the most beautiful of the control of the co vicious aims which caste has create in spite of Christianity, and preserved in spite of all human progress. Her reception at the palace displeased

Her reception at the palace displeased her more than the previous welcome had done. She had really been delayed in her journey to the frontier by an accident on one of the trains, but this fact seemed to her no possible reason why royalty should not have immediate and sumptuous means at its command for treating her with the same homage by night as by dap. "A King," she said to her son, when at last they were alone together in a suite of chambers which even she, prepared to cavil and to damn with faint praise, could not but frankly admire for their simple yet noble splendor—"A King, my dear Clarimond, shou'd never be caught without his magnificence."

"Well, granted."
"Almost as rich." she went on with

"Deluge me with words if you will," said the Princess, and she smiled her iciest smile. "The palace is bandsome, but it smells of fresh paint, so to speak, and I am sure that when I see its white marble grandeur I shall only repeat the verdict already conveyed to me in Italy by the most competent judges—that it does not betray a sign of genius, but is just what hundreds of clever Americans could have accomplished if given the same tremendous carte_blanche which

"The American nobody, as you call him, would not accept it. He is an artist, and politics, like all ugly things, are repellent to artists."

The Princess heaved a resonant and irritated sigh. "Worse and worse," she muttered. "God has called you to be King over this land where your ancestors have ruled for nearly a thousand years," she went on, in strained, passionate falsetto. At this point Clarimond ceased from his impatient walk and paused directly in front of his mother. Flashes left his eyes that bespoke irony and yet earnestness as well. cate tomorrow and make Saltravia a republic like Switzerland, instead of the petty, subservient monarchy that it is, I would give up my throne with the most cheerful renunciation."

"Clarimond!"

"But I know too well," he resumed with loudening voice and a curl of the lip far more sad than spleenful, "that any such act as this would only rouse the wrath of the Emperor and plunge my poor country in untold distress. Hence I must remain the miserable parody of a king that I am—I, pierced with disgust for the paltry pretensions of all sovereigns, loving the broad popular impulse of self-government with a love drawn from intuition, reflection and the wisdom of the world's highest thinkers. My fate is both a piteous and a terrible one!" He grew still paler now, and for a moment covered his face with both hands, while a tremor stirred his frame like a sudden breeze that grasps a sturdy tree. "On every side of me I discern." he pursued, "the richest chances of raising, not merely this race, over which I rule, but of setting to all mankind an example of liberty, fraternity, fellowship! And of setting to all mankind an example of liberty, fraternity, fellowship! And yet my limbs are bound with bonds—golden, if you please, but bonds that I cannot break. If I were only less of a king I might be more of a man. If I were only more of a king I might be less of a slave!"

of a slave!"

"A slave, Clarimond! You do not merely shock, you horrify me!"

"Mother!" he cries, advancing toward her as she rose, "there are times when I horrify myself! If I were the Emperor this hour I would make Europe ring with my self-abnegations, my revolts against abhorrent creeds, my mercy and pity for those vast throngs of the crushed and despised people whom centuries of injustice have cursed! I am one of them, heart and soul. They tell me that history repeats itself. No; it contradicts itself, and such a king as I—the incarnate satire such a king as I—the incarnate satire on all despotisms, outrages, feudalisms of the past—is one of history's harshest contraditions!"

His excitement had flared up like live flame, but in an instant mere it died and he was again his calm self. The Princess, however, returned to her chair with ashen face and a staggering step. Words like these were literal blows of insult to her; they wrought in her the same sensation as the hooting of a mob at her window would have done, or a volley of stones flung into her carriage.

"The fault has been mine window."

"The fault has been mine-mine!" she exclaimed brokenly, as soon as any voice at all would come to her. "I—I left you among your father's people, and they have always flown in the face left you among your father's people, and they have always flown in the face of order, with their horrid heresless and paganisms. For you to feel as you tell me, Clarimond, is in my sight a fearful blasphemy," and here the Princess wrung her beautiful white hands. "But still, my son, it you think like this, you need not, for such reason, act like this. And at once—yes, at once, Clarimond—I wish to speak to you of your possible marriage. You have already seen Blanca d' Este. That she is lovely in face and form it will be foolish even to remind you; no one can look on her without conceding this much. But her nature is no less winsome than her person. I have dreamed of making her your wife; I—I will not say that I have come here with this positive purpose; but it has held over me an undoubted sway. Such a marriage as that would work in you the most helpful and steadying changes. Oh, don't fancy that I mean for you to take Bianca as if she were a dose of medicine. She has had men of the highest rank at her feet and refused them; she is captivating, as you will soon see, apart from her name, her birth, ves, even from her beauty. I mean that she is accomplished in a hundred pretty, appealing ways, which adorn her native strength of character like the enameling on silver. Still, in spirit this dear girl already dedicated to the church, and perhaps if you were to lay your crown before the first control before her she would sweetly yet."

The Princess, though much men and the theory should sweetly yet. The princess though much men and prince the control of the men and prince the course of revenue to be thought and steadying changes. Oh, don't fancy that I mean for you to take Bianca as if she were a dose of medicine. She has had men of the highest rank at her feet and refused them; she is captivated to the church, and prince the princess though much men and prince the princess though much men and prince the prince that the prince that the feel and refused them; she is captivated to the church, and prince the prince that firmly refuse it. But ah, my Clarimond, if she should bend that golden head of hers for you to set it there, how invaluable would prove her wifehood! Her queenhood, too, I should say, and you would revere in her both qualities. By degrees her influence would tranquilize in your fevered mind all these wild and fruitless longings, which are the fatal pride of intellect alone. You would slowly realize that kings are the sacred vicars of God's will, and that the only safe watchword of the great, common, witless mass is 'obedience.' You would slowly realize again, my dear son,—" would slowly realize again, my dear son,—"

But here Clarimond ventured an interruption. He had borne much from his mother in the past; he was prepared to bear much from her in the future, since already it had grown clear to him that she had arrived with the intent of a permanent sojourn. But just now, notwithstanding that late effort at self-control which had resulted so successfully, the King once more felt his nerves in danger of tumult. He had never behaved to his mother with the faintest lack of respectful gallantry; he was, indeed, incapable of any act toward her except one of gentleness and toleration, no matter how exacting or imperious might have been her own attributed. imperious might have been her own at-titude. Nevertheless, he had in readi-ness at his mental command a certain quiet yet cogent force of repulsion, which his great position made it not seldom requisite for him to employ, and which he did not hesitate to employ now.

"My dear mother," he said, bending over her hand and touching it lightly with his lips, "you surely must be fatigued with your journey, and if you will permit, I will send to you your women. Perhaps I have been too reckless in my recent confidences, and if so pray remember that I have uttered them in no role of personal resentment. As for the young lady whom you have brought to Saltravia with the expectation of making her my wife, it would be idle in me to place the attractions of either my throne or my personality against those of her mother church. Surely she will there find profounder consolation than any that my more against those of her mother church. Surely she will there find profounder consolation than any that my more limited resources could bestow."

This, even from son to mother, was a sort of royal dismissal. But the Princess, who might be got rid of for a night, could not be waived aside more durably. As one of her detested Americans might have said, she had come to stay. The King now felt himself in straits with regard to the due reception and entertainment of Alonzo. On the following day he and Eric presented themselves at the palace and an hour or two of the most pleasant intercourse ensued. Alonzo, after visiting with the King those great galleries on whose walls blank spaces were left forthe pictures he would probably bring to them, felt immensely drawn toward his new master. In a few more days he started on the first of his missions, one that took him among certain old monasteries in the north of Italy. Meanwhile the King bored himself with etiquette and a precedent under the keen scrutiny of his mother. The Princess would not be in the princes would not be income. precedent under the keen scrutiny of his mother. The Princess would not lift an eyelid unless court custom sanc-tioned it. She managed during that summer and the next autumn to gather about herself a little coterie of support-ers, and for a time a new political party was talked of. But her son's entire in-difference may have gone far to pre-vent such imprudent measures.

"My mother has tortured us for eight weeks," Clarimond at length said to Eric. "I wonder how much longer she will insist upon making it a crime for a man to be seen smoking a cigarette within twenty yards of her, even euleine et?"

within twenty yards of her, even eupleine air."

"What is the punishment for such a crime?" asked Eric, who had thus far been simply repelled by the Princess, never presuming to cross the threshold of any chamber in which she chose to enshrine her august presence.

"Decapitation, I believe," said the king, tragi-comically. "My dear Eric," he went on, "is not everything quite spoiled?"

"We had thought of a sham revolution, Lonz and I," began Eric. And then he described, in terse and swift phrase, an imaginary fete, where the court would play parts of masquerading martyrs and suppliants and the palace would be stormed by supposititious insurgents.

would be stormed by supposititious insurgents.
"Delightful," said Clarimond. "What 'a lark," to speak your American slang! We would give sanguinary orders to the maitre d' hotel. Plenty of blood, and heads on pikes, thrust in at the windows. Everybody would be mock-terrified until supper time, and then it would all end in amicable beakers. Did your beloved Alonzo suggest that? No, I need not ask, Eric. It is too distinctly you."

you."
"It is he, not I," replied Eric, fibbing shamelessly. "When you know him better you will accredit him with the originality of the idea."
"I know him well enough," said the King, "to accredit him with much in-King, "to accredit him with much inventiveness. But my mother—"

"Ah, yes, Your Majesty, I—"
"Tut, tut, Eric. If you 'Majesty' me I will exile you from Saltravia."
"Pardon, monsieur; it was a slip."
"Don't let the slip occur again. But the Princess would never consent to such a fête. It would satirize too flercely her well-known prejudices.
'Lonz,' as you call him, will soon be back with some treasures?"
Alonzo returned within the week.

Alonzo returned within the week, and greatly pleased his new employer by one or two shrewd selections in the way of purchase. But when October had waned, and the Princess had given had waned, and the Princess had given every sign that she did not choose to re-seek her dear Italy, Clarimond de-clared himself piteously handicapped. Binaca d' Este was forever thrust at him, and the young lady's "accomplish-ments" were made as drearily ordinary to him as the details of his toast and coffee at breakfast time. He could discover in Bianca nothing that interested him. The winter began, and the court had become, ungan, and the court had become, under the Princess' haughty surveillance, one sombre monotony. Winter in Saltravia was never severe; snow fell and blasts blew, but seldom with harsh result. Alonzo, thoroughly fitted to his new position, acquitted himself with skill and tact. He made several new journeys, and each bore its fine artistic fruit. The King became almost as devotedly his friend as he was the friend of Eric. When a fresh spring had lavished its green beauty on the Saltravian hills, Eric declared to his fellow-lodger: "I am positively jealous of you, my Clarimond's environment, and by the time the May touched the valley with its tender promises she had filled it also with feud and bickerings. It was her wish that the hotels adjacent to the springs should be closed permanently, but on this point the King showed firm disfavor. "The waters are wonderfully healing." he said. "Let those who choose come and drink of them." "Bah," said his mother. "My dear Clarimond, you cheapen your charming little kingdom. And then those unspeakable Americans!"

"Unspeakable indeed," said the King, "in occasional instances."
"What do you mean?" asked the Princess, with a start.
"I mean the enchanting young American lady of whom I caught a glimpse last evening." he replied "Fre not yet found out her name, but Eric has promised to get it for me. Perhaps Lispenard might know her, but as you are probably aware, he is now in Munich."

The Princess gnawed her nether lip and said nothing. Her son's civilities to Bianca d'Este had not been half, as

The name of this "enchanting young American lady" in whom the King found himself uncommonly interested was Kathleen Kennaird. On the morrow Kathleen Kennaird. On the morrow Eric Thaxter made that discovery, and at once imparted it to Clarimond. For some reason Eric refrained from mentioning the former relations between Kathleen and his absent friend. All the time, however, he was telling himself that it was a very small world, and wondering if Alonzo would not agree with him to this effect when he returned from Munich.

"I should like greatly to know that girl," the King said to Eric a day or two later. "Her face somehow haunts me. Do what you can about it, won't you?"

If Mrs. Kennaird had heard those words from the royal lips it is certain that her heart would have given a very lofty leap indeed.

Interesting Reminiscences of the Late Emperor of the French

Ex-Senator Given, Col. Blanton Dune and the Mexican Move-ment Under Maximilian.

Col. Duncan having referred to the part he was to have taken in the French development of Mexican mining states, was asked to give particulars as to that fornia who knew him thoroughly, is aware, was a man of worder ful fornia who knew him thoroughly, is aware, was a man of woaderful energy, desirous of doing something to employ his brain and to keep himself thereby in physical health and mental activity. As he said he despised to see any body sitting under a tree because he was over sixty—just rusting away when he could be of so much service to somebody else." Raised in the South with all his sympathles toward her people in the great struggle, Gwin found himself stranded when California took sides for the Union, and he and his friends were not only politically overthrown, but looked upon with suspiciou. Gwin came through the South and, was in Richmond at the time of the hattie of Seven Pines, in which Gen. Johnston was badly wounded and compelled to give up his command temporarily. A train was under my control in 1862 to move important macinery, etc., used in making the government money, down to Columbia. S. C. Mrs. President Davis, Gwin and others went with me as far as North Carolina—Gwin being then on his way to Europe, where he soon afterward arrived and joined his family in Paris. They all resided there during the war. Considerable sums had been invested at 12 per cent. in gold by Gwin so that he had ample means.

At the termination of the civil war all France was getting into an uproar

At the termination of the civil war all France was getting into an uproar over the vast sums expended to keep Maxmilian on his throne by the aid of, a French army, and Napoleon found the condition so embarrassing that he was compelled to withdraw his troeps, or run the risk of war with the United States. Gwin suggested to some of the ministry that with such a vast number French army, and Napoleon found the condition so embarrassing that he was compelled to withdraw his troops, or run the risk of war with the United States. Gwin suggested to some of the ministry that with such a vast number of officers and men discharged from the two armies—and nothing for them to do, it would be feasible to get the best material to embark in a Mexican immigration, if backed by France financially, and invited by Maximilian. And that would be the wisest plan for France thus to get back the enormous expenses of the previous years, which otherwise would be hopelessly lost. The Emperor had several interviews with Gwin, and appoved the suggestion, am agreed that Bazaine should leave 10,000 of his best troops fully equipped in every branch and amply supplied, who should subject to the approval of Maximilian, be sent to the northwestern States of Mexico, and there Gwin should go as the first of the condition. The North has be sent to the northwestern States of more waiting this period I was in France awaiting the response to be minded by Maximilian, when, if favor make by Maximilian, when, if favor make the work of Maximilian in the response to be minded by Maximilian, when, if favor make the work of the whole world." gration, if backed by France financially, and invited by Maximilian. And that the would be the wisest plan for France thus to get back the enormous expenses of the previous years, which otherwise would be hopelessly lost. The member of had several interviews with Gwin, and appoved the suggestion, and agreed that Bazaine should leave 10,000 of his best troops fully equipped in every branch and amply supplied, who should subject to the approval of Maximilian be sent to the northwestern States of Mexico, and there Gwin should go as the Viceroy of France, and be general the Viceroy of France, and be general in the French army to hold those States in pledge for the purpose of opening and working the magnificent gold and will be stated to the purpose of t and working the magnificent gold and silver mines, which it was well established, had not yielded a tithe of the rich minerals which the Spaniards had discovered and worked in crude and inefficient manner for centuries. The agreement was that Gwin should be so authorized; and furnished with means from France to bring into those Mexican States the most serviceable and intelligent officers and menfrom both federal and confederate circles, and to organize them both to work and develop to the fullest extent all these Mexican resources, and at the same time to be formed into corps, divisions, etc., in sufficient strength to maintain their position against anybody. And as soon as this organization and new government was on a firm basis the French troops were to be sent home. It was believed that the encouragement this offered to the disbanded American troops would secure a vast influx, which would support a strong and well administered government under American leadership, and give no of-tary of state to arrange anything the government might determine to do. Gwin said he was the bearer of a letter from the Emperor, who had discussed these affairs in person, and he was his envoy and ambassador to an Emperor who certainly did not rank in fame and power with Napoleon; that he had not been sent to see a Mexican minister, and would not call upon him, or let any substitution be made in the plans of the Emperor Napoleon. Bazaine urged repeatedly that Maximilian should see Gwin, and warned him of the perils and treachery to which he would be exposed as soon as the moral and physical support of France was withdrawn. It was useless. The obstinacy was inflexible; and when Bazaine began his march to Vera Cruz, Gwin started out alone on his journey to the Rio Grande, where, to his great surprise, he was arrested and sent to Fort Jackson below New Orleans. He was confined a long time, and after my arrival in the United States in 1866 I represented to influential men in New York and Washington that gress finius. connect a long time, and after my arrival in the United States in 1868 I represented to influential men in New York and Washington that gross injustice was done—that there was no strain upon Gwin's honor in conspiring against the Union, but that the whole enterprise would have been so helped as to benefit the country, give fields of employment to many hundreds of thousands and serve to harmonize affairs by bringing into closer association those who had been in opposing armies. When this became positively known, and was vouched for, Gwin was discharged. Under this plan there would have been an army of 100,000 men under Gwin in six months—not to remain in camp, but to go to work. In twenty-four hours these men could have been formed into line as efficiently as when they marched under Grant and Sheridan, or Lee, Johnston and Beauregard.

There would have been hundreds of

There would have been hundreds of millions of capital from private sources ready to embark in any enterprise which France indorsed as receiving government support. I have a copy of a concession which I had proposed, and which no doubt the Emperor would have granted me as soon as the vice-royalty had been established.

"PARIS, March 24, 1865.

"The undesigned proposes to go to the Empire of Mexico for the purpose of aiding in its development. In pursuance thereof he contemplates building a line of railway from a point upon the waters of the Gulf of Mexico, or of the Laguna Madre, near the mouth of River Rio Grande, and from thence to Mazatlan on the Pacific Coast. He Myazatlan on the Pacific Coast. He was that similar concessions may be granted to him as have already been given to the company now constructing the road from Vera Cruz to the City of the road from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico. In connection with this railroad he proposes that a line of steamships suitable for the purpose shall be at once started from Europe to both coasts of the Mexican Empire, by means of which both emigrants and material shall be rapidly introduced into the country; and he further asks that such aid in the way of carrying out this project may be given whenever government freight has to be sent to and from that Empire."

ment freight has to be sent to and from that Empire."
This is the only one of my papers which I find except a letter of May 16. 1865, to Marshal Palikao, secretary of war, inclosing a letter from the Duke de Saldanha, and another from Gen. Beauregard, in reference to which I said: "You will see that Beauregard months ago foresaw the dangers which menaced at this moment the future of France and Mexico. The greatest is that France may deceive herself as to that France may deceive herself as to the intentions of the United States. Pricofficial declarations in diplomacy afficient to nothing—as the popular will must govern—and that will be against the existence of an Empire on the North American continent. The war North American continent. The war between the Juarists and Maximilian will be continued aided as the former will be by thousands of filibusters, now that the civil war is virtually ended. Your ambassador cannot give you, as we who understand it so wen, the sen-timent of the country and of the northern leaders. Assurances may be given by the government that no hos-tifle expeditions will be permitted to march against friendly powers. But the northern sentiment is almost unanimous to sustain the Republicans of Mex-leo against the I mperialists. The gov-ernment could not control the opinions, if so desiring; and you will discover that no interference will be made to winder armed intervention. You have

It was during this period I was in France awaiting the response to be made by Maximilian, when, if favorable, a French vessel was to have sued under my control, laden with the best mining machinery and everything needed for the use of the vice-royalty development.

Maximilian had heard fully of Senator Gwin's career—of his ambition, his daring, his energy, and how powerful he had been in California, contiguous to the Mexican States, which it was proposed to place under his domination, backed by the power of France, in a legitimate enterprise, by means of which to restore to France the vast sums then virtually lost in the Mexican expedition. He feared that if Gwin got a hold in Mexico with such fabulous temptations to offer, that all his ascendency in California would be restored, and that in a short time, perhaps only a year or two, Gwin and his associates would serve notice on the Empire to quit, and the Emperor to leave Mexico, which would then be entirely held by Gwin & Co. Perhaps Maximilian Mexico, which would then be entirely held by Gwin & Co. Perhaps Maximilian neid by Gwin & Co. Pernaps Maximilian was right in that respect as to what our future views would have been. But we would have given him the honors of war, and neither entrapped him by treachery nor shot him down like a dog

Los Angeles has been suffering under an embarrassment of riches during the past week in the line of social, literary and musical entertainments. Foremos of all was the Simpson chrysanthemum fair, round which the social world re-volved. The picturesque garden with its wealth of floral and human beauty has been the favorite resort of evenings. The horticultural fair at Hazard's Pavilion has also received its full share of patronage, and Los Angeles may well be proud of her florists and horticulturists, who can place before the public so distinctively artistic an arrangement of plants and flowers.

The Treble Clef concert Friday even ing called out all the fashionable ele ment of the city, and the brilliant audience was a tribute of appreciation to the ladies who form the club.

Last evening the Euterpean Quartette and Quintette Club at the Y. M. C. A. Hall called out another large audience.
Then there has been a series of quiet dinners and teas which have filled up the interim, besides several weddings which are always in season. Indeed the week has been so full that the question of being inctwo or three places at once has been agitating the minds of society people to an alarming extent. This week promises quite as much. The Simpson fair continues till Satur day night, and other events of a social nature will crowd in, keeping up a continuous whirl of entertainments.

ALL HALLOW E'EN. Hallow eve, the vigil of All Hallows day, that popular festival dedicated by the young people to the mystic ceremonies, future revelations, fireside rev monies, future revelations, fireside revelries and all sorts of weird performances, made its annual appearance last night, and was greeted with enthusiasm and appropriate celebrations by the younger element of society. Several gates disappeared mysteriously during the silent watches of the night, and there was general havoc wrought in the south end of the city, by the witches and other mischief making beings, who were abroad on their baneful midnight errands.

A large party of young people gathered at the residence of Judge Brousseau, on Bunker Hill avenue, last evening, on invitation of Miss Mabel Brousseau, to celebrate the anniversary and endeavor by the performance of spells to discover their future partners for life. Two immense jack o' lanterns, stationed at the sentrance, grinned a ghastly welcome to the guests. All the superstitious fancies of the Scottish superstitious fancies of the Scottish peasantry concerning this festival were indulged in. The gay company ducked for apples, blew out candles blindfolded, and watched with bated breath to see which candle burned longest in the floating walnut shells, miniature productions of the Indian maiden's rush lamp of fate. By the time all these mysterious rites had been performed the young people were ready to do ample justice to the delicious refreshments which were served. Dancing followed in commemoration of Dancing followed in commemoration of the fairies who are said to hold a grand anniversary on All Hallow E'en, and when the clock told midnight, the hour when ghosts begin to jibber and spirits to walk, the young people ceased their

LITERARY WORK.

The interest manifested in the work of the members of the Los Angeles Business College Literary Society is most commendable. The society held its meeting last Friday at 2:30 p.m., rendering readings, recitations, music and debates. The subject for discussion was: "Resolved, that orgators do more for the work.

ject for discussion was: "Resolved, that orators do more for the progress of nations than authors." The able manner in which the leaders presented their arguments was very creditable.

A programme has been arranged for next Friday evening, at 7:30, to be held in the College Hall, 144 South Main street. Some of the best talent in the city will assist in the programme.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

The meeting of last Monday night at Mr. Schallert's residence, devoted to Johann Sebastian Bach, was in many respects a peculiarly interesting one including as it did so much of variet and depth. Prof. Wilde played the St. Ann's fugue and that still greater one in G winor. Miss K. Kimball and Mr. J. A. Osgood sang respectively, "My Heart Ever Faithful" and "Forget Me Not." a prayer of wonderful pathos and serious beauty. Mrs. S. Masae played the famous "Toccato and fugue" with fine effect, and later some characteristic inventions of the master's lighter

Another selection from the programme was three numbers from a sacred molette for double quartette, where one theme is carried out with varied harmonizations, in the pure style of the severe old school of the earlier writers. severe old school of the earlier writers. Prof. Wilharlity read the biographical paper, giving not only an extended account of the composer, but drawing also an inspiring and reverential picture of him as a man, simple, honest, poor and unaffected, despising all worldly honors and living wholly for his duties as a man, a citizen and a musician.

After the regular programme the club were given the pleasure of hearing Mrs. Bloodgood sing "The Erl Ring," and

A MANUAL OF MUSIC.

So many subscription books bear on their face the marks of a mercenary their face the marks of a mercenary motive that one takes pleasure in indorsing an exception. "The Manual of Music" is a reliable book. The biographies and photographs of the musicians are of no striking merit, but the chronological tables, which are brought up to the year 1890, and the critical analysis of the great musical works of the entife world of composers, make the truly valuable thing it claims to be. No small boon to students of music is the addenda of a dictionary of technical terms, phrases, words, instruments, institutions and names, with definition and pronunciation and data of interest.

The character of their selections savored more of the entré act than will be the case in the future, when a classical repetory will be chosen. Their music, though light, was given with the excellence that the individual ability of the Club would lead the public to expect. The next concert in the course will be in charge of Miss Emily Valentine.

THE CHASM BRIDGED.

An Interesting Paper by Rev. R. M. Webster

Read Before the Unitarian Conference in This City.

Pertinent Questions Asked and Satisfactory Answers Given.

How the Chasm Separating the Orthodo: and the Liberals May be Eventually Closed-An Exhaustive Argument.

Last Monday evening at the Unitarian conference, the session was devoted to a general discussion of the liberal movements of Protestantism, during which several papers were read, among them one by Rev. R. M. Webster of Long which has been generally dis cussed, and very favorably commented upon. The full text of the paper is as

THE CHASM BRIDGED.

What chasm? That between those known as orthodox and those known as liberals. The subject assumes that there is a chasm separating these people; that formerly it was so deep and wide that none could pass from one side to the other unless he was fired across or went over in a balloon. This latter may have been done on occasion, as there has been plenty of gas on either side, but there was no bridge. The chasm was never so wide but that men could shout at each other from side to side, and throw stones, and even mud now and then, but there was no easy communication and friendly interchange.

Our subject also assumes that there is at length a bridge; that there is some interchange of friendly greeting; and that fit is possible, without loss either of life or limb, for people on one side to cross over with all their belongings and settle down on the other side. Some study of this—under the questions that follow—may be worth while:

First—How came the chasm to be?

Second—How came the bridge?

Second—How came the bridge?
Third—What commerce is there across it?
Fourth—From which side is the greater migration?
Fifth—What sort of people move over to stay? Sixth—What prospect is there of closing sixtim—what prospect to tacte of the property of the property pecially as this may be swer.

Certainly there does not belong to me such peculiar mental power, or spiritual illuminations, or rich and varied stores of learning, as should enable me better than many others, to answer these questions.

But I have lived about equal times on each side of the chasm. I have helped a little about the bridge—at least to keep it in repair.

each side of the chass. Thave appear in the repair.

Tused, when living among the orthodox, to throw stones at any on the other side who happened in sight.

To me every out-spoken liberal was an uncircumscised Philistine—a of the armies of defier Israel, and I would play David, or one of the 300 Benjamites, who could sling a stone at a hair's breadth, even with the left, hand, and never miss. Whenever I whirled my sling I was sure I hit the Philistine—but some how he never fell, and I never had the pleasure of taking his head off with his own swred. Occasionally a stone would fly over from the other side and hit me, and wake up a deal of reflection.

Now, it came to pass, after a good many such hits and reflections, I ceased to throw stones, and began, when walking along the chasm, and descrying a pilgrim on the opposite side, to take off my hat to him, and smile upon him in a more or less timid way. And I noticed he—whoever of them he might be—would Smile in return, but not so timidly.

At length I became aware that they were timidly.

At length I became aware that they were men of like passions, and, withal, of like virtues of other men. I saw that quite as many of them meant to be good—really tried to, and found it about as difficult.

many of them meant to be good—really tried to, and found it about as difficult. This won my sympathy.

But this took time. For a long while I was sure they would all find themselves out in the dark, when the bridegroom came and the gates were shut; for had not my father and mother, and my grandmother and the Westiminster's confession of faith and the first pastor of my boyhood acquaintance, and the minister who taught me first lessons in the Greek Testament, and the professors who looked after my college life and all my nearest friends, and all the books that were put into my hands—nad they not all warned me that on the liberal side of that chasm lived anti-Christ, an agre who fed young men on dainties and treated them well for a time—that he might make a pleasanter and easier meal of them by and by.

Indeed, "after the most straitest sect of religion I lived a Pharisee." And were not the Pharisees surely right; Did they not sit in Moses's seat? Were they not in the historic line of ecclesiastical and doctrinal control? How could I doubt? Did I not know the arguments and the proof tests? Did not the traditions of my fathers, the church of my youth, and all my social ties hold me to my own side of the chasm? But when I discovered the pleasant faces upon the other side I learned that they hold me to my own side of the chasm? But when I discovered the pleasant faces upon the other side I learned that they who threw missiles at me could be as courteous as I could be. Above all when I learned this peculiarity of these missiles, that, the harder they hit me the less they hurt me, and put me the more upon a train of, helpful and hopeful reflection, I grew to desire them. But I could throw no more stones. When the wind was right I threw apples across, and sometimes flowers, and they from their side would send over showers of lovely and fragrant things from their thought gardens. I became anxious to get over and see them more closely. I began to want a bridge. Wonderful to tell, I no sooner heartily wanted one than I began to look for one, and lo: there it was,

I ran over at once. I confess I looked warily for the ogre, but did not see him. I

Iran over at once. I confess I looked warlly for the ogre, but did not see him. I found some men and women who looked kind and good and who gave me flowers and fruit grown in fields of poetry and inspiration. I returned and reported. I was cautioned I should surely be kidnaped and spirited away into dark and doleful places, and that would be the end of me.

For a good while I felt safer on my own side. However, I went oftener and oftener over the bridge, still keeping my line of retreat open if need were. Once I was admitted into the famous grounds of W. E. Channing. known and revered in that region. The air was fragrant and bracing. The grounds were high and commanded a delightful view. Useful and lovely things good for food and pleasant to the eye grew on every side. I ate freely and was greatly refreshed. At other times I visited the domain of the Deweys and the Nortons, and went through the fields with Mr Hedge, who spoke so wisely upon the ways of the spirit that I have been wiser ever since.

To my surprise I found over there some delightful gardens, belonging to noble poets and scholars who, I had always supposed—as a child—were on our side. There were the estates of Henry and Samuel Longfellow, open to all comers, night and day, everything free, and such beauty and such lifegiving fruits. I tarried long in such retreats, and went again and again, as bees goto richly-laden blossoms.

Once a friend conducted me to the place where James Martineau lived and labored. There I found what moved, inspired, lifted me as on eagles' wings.

To be sure, I found there some who were very much like the Pharisees and Sirches, who said that what was not on their side was not worth having. And then some me as on eagles' wings.

To be sure, I found there some who were to the conservative side, and I saw that was not on their side was not worth having. And they spoke with disdain and bitterness of the men on the opposite side, and I saw the familiar sight—the man with the muck-rake who never looked up. But people to be admired and trusted were there, people who made their region lovely.

So it has turned out with me as I was warned. "Seen too oft, familiar with their face, you'll first endure, then pity, then embrace." Only my embrace of the liberals has proven far from unpleasant, let alone deadly, as my friends had feared. I was never so much alive as now, and my deliberate testimony is, that while I found much help and consolation on 'my pilgrim way among those on the conservative side, I and more courage, more freedom, more faith, more hope and more charity among faith, more hope and more charity among the property of the pr

the straght-jacket of dogmatic assertion, and into the fetters of theology that stands upon authorities.

But how came the bridge?
The fact is, the chasm was no sooner there than some on each side were anxious for a bridge. The bridge was not built wholly from one side. The kind of people who wanted a bridge were such as meant what they said when they prayed, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors;" who took the precept, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," as sound reason, and who understood the good Samaritan story to mean that any one is a neighbor whom we can in any way serve whether he begins to spell the name of God with tri-in or with uni, or spells it simply g-oo-d.

On the orthodox side, they were people who remembered the words of Jesus, how he said: "Why do ye not even of yourselves, judge what is right," and who, when they thought of these words, said: "Well, is not that what they, on the other side are doing, while we are permitting our creed-makers and church managers to judge for us what is right."

On the liberal side, they who wanted the bridge, were such as remembered that inon the liberal side, they who wanted the bridge, were such as remembered that injunction of sweet reason, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." In short, on both sides they were people who loved God and man more than they loved their own outlines.

who loved God and man more than they loved their own opinions.

Now it comes to pass that these good people on either side, by means of those spiritual affinities that know nothing of chasms, discovered each other. Sometimes they made signs to each other with the national flag, which each side equally respected. Sometimes they on one side would sing "America." and they on the other side would take up the strain. Occasionally a speaker on one side would lift up his voice so loud and clear in favor of freedom for slaves, or in favor of education for all, or in favor of reforms for civil service, or in the care of criminals, or in defense of popular interests against monopolies, that their friends on the other side would hear, and cheer. And whenever a thoroughly good thing was said on one side, that wind which bloweth where it listed, was sure to blow toward the other side and carry it. So, many by reason of a common sympathy with human need and sorrow, found them selves drawn together. loved their own opinions. selves drawn together.

Now here is a wonderful thing. When men would have the chasm, and prepared picks, sho/els, scrapers and machinery, and got tegether for the work, lo! the chasm was there; the very planet cracked apart, and the people were divided one from another.

was there; the very planet cracked apart, and the people were dividedone from another.

I have learned, indeed, that this is natural law; whenever you truly intend to put a chasm between you and another nature responds to your wish, and there your chasm is with no further effort on your part.

In like manner when these good people fervenly desired a bridge they had but to look and behold; there it was. On examination it was found that the stringers of this bridge are faith, hope, love. Not faith in any man's creed—but faith, the thing itself—that risks everything in seeking truth and serving men, on the assurance that it is always good to obey one's own genuine conviction and always safe to do right.

And hope—not to get out of a general wreck, with one's own each and diamonds and possibly a trunk—but hope, the thing itself, hope for humanity, a strong, brave looking for of good for the world and for all in it.

And love—not mere regard for one's

And love-not mere regard for one's

These have been supplied from both sides, for, strange as it may seem, this chasm runs right through the garden of the Lord. And there are lovely parts of the garden on either side. Each side has some equally excellent mils and sawyers for the preparation of these planks.

These churches—mills, I mean—and these teachers and preachers—I mean sawyers—are to be found in numerous places.

Among them we may mention the control Collyer. We may perhaps think of those as chiefs among any number of equals. For their name is legion.

There are concerns that have enough material on hand to build plank walks all through both territories, which might be specially made, were not laborers so few it is said by careful observers that laborers on both sides are increasing.

Third—What about commerce over this bridge? It is constantly increasing, though the demand for goods from the other side is greater among the othordox. It must be admitted that inquiry on the liberal side for othordox productions is extremely qutet, and quotations are so low that there are practically no shipments across. In fact othordox goods are not much sought of the new styles.

Third mand to build plank walks all through both territories, which might be admitted that inquiry on the liberal side for othordox productions is extremely qutet, and quotations are so low that there are practically no shipments across. In fact othordox goods are not much sought of the new styles.

Third mand to districts, which have not learned of the new styles.

This difference is natural, for the liberal goods are generally fresh, of new designs, and produced by methods in keeping with the general advance in science, art, discovery and popular education. While the goods offered on the orthodox side are so often shelf-worn, moth-eaten, or rusty, or awakward and out of date, they always suffer, in the minds of practical people, by an offer, in the minds of practical people, by an offer, in the minds of practical people, by an offer, in the minds of practical people, by an offe but a word more. Since the movement is all one way, the question simply is: What sort of persons leave the orthodox side. To this, those who remain orthodox relity, and say: "They are all persons who are a a little shary, morally, or, a little out user a little shary, morally, or, a little out user tally," and some of them fear that these persons are a good deal of both. This, however, is the judgment of prejudice—orighat state of mind which judged that Jesus had a devil and was mad—that is, that he was very shaky morally and quite out mentally; state of mind which judged that is, that he was very shaky morally and quite out mentally; in other words, that he was both knavish and foolish.

When we remember that it was the leaders of opinion, the church authorities, the theological magnates, the pillars of established institutions who so judged the Master in His day, we need not be much disturbed by a similar judgment on the part of similarly situated people—concerning those disciples of the Master, who, like Him, resolutely liberate themselves from ecclesiastical control and from bondage totradition in our day. If they called the master of the house Beelzebub, then, we of his household need not be worried or an agered by similar epithets.

master of the house Beelzebub, then, we of his household need not be worried or angered by similar epithets.

No; those who move over to the liberal side may in many cases lack the wisdom of the serpent conjoined with the harmonionsness of the dove. They may too often relation with the harmonionsness of the dove. They may too often allow unfriendly criticism of former friends to make them bitter and ungracious, and to fige that he only is liberal who can, without the control of the light of the control of the light and women who have learned to put conduct before creed, and character before opinions, and value institutions in proportion to the light and sweetness they furnish for human life. Their faces are toward the future rather than toward the paet.

Six—What prospect of closing up the chasm? A good one. There is a constant movement of divine energy, and every time this movement is resisted, be it in art, science, literature, public schools, industrial organization or religion, it only gathers force, and there is a shaking that jars the world and brings the sides of the chasm toward each other. Shakable things are tumbled into it that the things which cannot be shaken may remain to instruct and bless mankind. The prayers of Jesus "that they all may be one" is the prayer of all loving and upright souls, and is a constant force that nothing can finally resist. By and by all the accumulated rubbish of centuries will be thrown into the chasm and its walls will come together over it and bury it out of sight, and there shall be one richly-culall the accumulated rubbish of centuries will be thrown into the chasm and its walls will come together over it and bury it out of sight, and there shall be one richly-curivated and beautiful garden extending over the earth. The trees of life shall be there, and life's waters shall sparkle and make glad the human race.

I might have spoken of the special movements of our own day, I dwelt upon the one in which the divine energy is most apparent, and in which God calls upon every one of us to take a stand such as, in our souls, we feel Jesus would take were he in our place. I mean what is commonly knows as "The labor question." It is the question of Christian socialism as against an unchristian individualism. This is to shake the nations. This is to draw a line right through Christendom, and separate those who are with Jesus Christ in spirit and truth from the mere self-seeking supporters of their own dogmas and institutions. This is to sift men. I might have spoken of the movement in all the churches, and I have, perhaps, sufficiently suggested it.

Let my closing word be this: "We know in part and we prophecy in part." All our knowledge and teaching is mixed with ignorance and weakness. "When that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away"—that is, opinions and methods will cease to control. "That which is perfect is come, that which is perfect is come. This is the greatest thing in the world, the greatest thing in any world. We must love one another, and dislike and oppose us.

Col. D. C. Dodge, general manager of the Rio Grand Western Railroad, is given as authority for the statement that the San Francisco Traffic Association has offered his road a bonus of $5,000,000 to induce it to extend its line to San Francisco. This tidy sun, it is said, will build about one-third of the desired extension. A similar proposition is said to have been made to the Union Pacific road. A franchise and subsidy have been voted by the Arizona Legislature, which are held by option by the Union Pacific.

Time Changes.

Despite the warning notices a good many people who want to go somewhere today will get left. The time tables all have undergone several changes. A circular issued from the Southern California general offices announces the changes on that road to be as follows: The trains which will be taken off the road today are No. 54, leaving Los Angeles at 6:30. o'clock p.m., for Azusa; No. 53, leaving Asura at 7:40 a.m., for Los Angeles; No. 146, leaving Los Angeles at 9:10 a.m., for Redondo Beach; No. 146, leaving Los Angeles; No. 148, leaving Los Angeles at 9:10 a.m., for Redondo Beach; No. 146, leaving Escondido at 5:30 p.m., for Los Angeles; No. 148, leaving Redondo Beach; No. 148, changes on that road to be as follows:

The meeting of the Santa Fé stock-holders in Topeka the other day did not develop much of interest to this section, especially to the San Diego people. Superintendent J. N. Sutton of the Rodondo railway, has been honored by naming a station for him. The station heretofore known as Monesa has been

The Fresno Expositor reports that S.

Notice to Contractors.

Tomorrow evening, after a long in-terregnum the Grand Operahouse will reopen with the production of a comedy that has been found sufficiently entertaining to amuse the Parisian public under its original title of Dr. Jo Jo for 540 nights. In its translated and adapted form as Dr. Bill it has de-lighted the Londoners for 350 performances, and later had a prosperous run of no less than 105 nights at the Garden Theater, New York. The piece has been very much written about and its plot, such as it has, is complicated and funny.

The reopening of the Operahouse to-tunny.

The reopening of the Operahouse tomorrow night will furnish an opportunity for inspecting many of the improvements in the auditorium upon which carpenters, painters and electricians have been kept busy for some time past. The preparations will not be found to be entirely completed but sufficient improvements will be observed to make a wonderful difference in the enjoyment of the house, The effort by both proprietor and managers is evidently in the direction of giving increased comfort and accommodation to creased comfort and accommodation to the public, and sufficient has already been accomplished to give the audience tomorrow night a pleasant surprise-

The omniscient telegraph reports that Sir Edwin Arnold has arrived in New York. After two years, absence his plans are to lecture for a season, or his plans are to lecture for a season, or rather, perhaps, to read. Sir Edwin is reported as saying, "I am going to attempt here something I would not think of doing anywhere else—that is, read my own poems. It is a very long while since such a thing has been done. The Greeks used to do it, you know, but it has been done very little since. I shall read chiefly from the "Light of Asia" and "The Light of the World." Sir Edwin's intention of reading from shair and "The Light of the World."

Sir Edwin's intention of reading from his own poems will be pleasurably received by the large body of his admirers. There is always an added delight in listening to an author we like, when delivering his own lucubrations. But Sir Edwin Arnold is hardly in touch with the times when he assumes that it is a long while since a poet has read his productions to the public Charles Dickens was a prose poet, and certainly delighted in giving such selections from his works as had a decided poetical cast. Tennyson himself delights in reading his own compositions to his friends, and thinks that no one can read "Maud" as he can. Not to speak it profanely, they say he bores his visitors with his readings, not knowing when to leave off.

A long list could be compiled, were it necessary, to show that poets of the modern day, from our own Hank Wagoner down, have tickled the public ear with the repetition of their mellifiuous versification. The Greeks, to whom Sir Edwin alludes with such respect, are not in it with the moderns, nor is it likely that in his interpretation of his own delightful poems Sir Edwin will imitate that sonorous chant which distinguished the famous speakers who in old times delivered "the rhythmical roll of the Greek" with such thrilling effect upon Greek" with such thrilling effect upon their audiences.

Manager Charles Frohman writes to the managers of the Operahouse, Messrs. McLain and Lehman, urging the fact that he is leading to this coast, for the production of Gillette's comedy, Mr. Wilkinson's Widows, the same complete company that has gaiped so much popular favor for the presentation of the piece in eastern cities. Mr. Frohman has made a special organization the piece in eastern cities. Mr. Frohman has made a special organization for this comedy, and includes in the roster the names of Joseph Holland, Thomas Burns, Georgie Drew Barrymore, Emily Bancker, Mattie Ferguson, Annie Wood, Adelaide Grey, Thomas W. Rifey, Edward Coleman, John W. Thompson and others.

Francis Wilson and his company of tinue their performances at the Broad-way Theater, New York, until May, when their Pacific Coast tour will be-gin. Mr. Hayman has made a special contract with this celebrated comedian for a specified number of performances, covering a period of nine weeks, dur-ing which he will appear in Omaha, Denver, Sait Lake, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland and perhaps in Ta-coma and Seattle. This tour will probably be the most venturesome one made to the Pacific Coast, so far as th risk of transporting such an expensive organization to only the most important cities in the far western territory is concerned; but it is believed that the elaborate productions of comic opera given by Mr. Wilson, and his own popu-larity as a comedian, will produce a successful outcome to the venture.

Marie Halton, who some time since gained notoriety by eloping from the Casino with a London diamond merchant, has been compelled to sell her jewels. They were said to be worth $12,000, but were knocked down un-$12,000, but were knocked down under the hammer for $4000. The elopement scandal brought out the fact that the fair runaway was 45 years old and the mother of a grown-up son; hence her difficulty in getting an engagement.

Edwin Booth must be amused, says an Eastern critic, and perhaps not a little disgusted, at the accounts of himself, as given in the daily press; that is to say, if he reads the articles written concerning his personal appearance. The World last week stated that Mr. Booth World last week stated that Mr. Booth was present on a certain evening at the performance of Amy Robsart, and, referring to his leaving his carriage, says that his "head was bowed upon his shoulders," and that he "reached out feebly, as if for support," that he "almost tottered through the door," and that he "looked very weak and ill, his features being pale and drawn." Universal sympathy might have been Universal sympathy might have been accorded to the tragedian had not the accorded to the tragedian had not the Times of the same date assured us that Mr. Booth "looked better than he has for a long while, and showed no signs of anything like a general breaking down." Mr. Booth's versatility is well known, but it cannot be imagined that he can simulate good and bad health at the same time.

"Senator" Crane produced for the port at Milwaukee on the 24th ult. The report of the first performance, as telegraphed to this Coast, says:

"The play deals with American life in the play deals with a life in the the phase of modern fads. The eastern the phase of modern fads. The eastern and western types are much exaggerated, and the English swell and the German investor in American securities are cruelly burlesqued. There are striking situations and fine climaxes, especially in the second and third acts, and there is little doubt that with proper pruning and amendments, clearly in order, the play will make a "go." But it will hardly come up to Mr. Crane's ambition. While he stars as "Commodore Franklin Ellsworth." who lends an honored name to a speculative scheme in mining stocks and finally has reasonable doubts of his wife's fidelity removed, other characters are brought so nearly to the same prominence. wife's fidelity removed, other characters are brought so nearly to the same prominence as to almost lose, the leader to those unfamiliar with his superior work. The play brings out Mr. Crane's ability as an actor and portrayer of pathos rather than as a comedian, and is of the pattern from which The Wife and Men and Women were drawn. drawn.

Here is an eastern item that would seem to furnish fruitful food for reflection to some of our local professionals and amateurs: "A company will soon start from New York with the intention start from New York with the intention of playing Hamlet in one night stands. The management think that the inhabitants of small towns have not seen Hamlet for a long time, because the play is too expensive for any but towns in which they are able to remain at least one week. The Hamlet by this company will be done by twelve people, and the scenery will be carried in a trunk and tacked over the old scenery in the theaters used."

The Philadelphia critics made Stuart Robson's "Tony Lumpkin" in She Stoops to Conquer the occasion for pitching into the farce-comedy craze, and say the outlook for a decent stage will be dismal indeed when Jefferson and Robson leave it.

A BLOODTHIRSTY HACKMAN.

He Threatens te Kill His Wife, and is Taken into Custody. Charles Sneider, a hack-driver, was arrested yesterday afternoon and booked at the police station for an assault with a deadly weapon. He gave cash bail in the sum of $50 and was released.

There is quite a romantic little story connected with this arrest. Last Au weeks they were married and took up weeks they were married and took up their residence at No. 415½ South Spring street. For a few days the couple were as happy as possible; but the husband soon decided that it was necessary to go on the warpath, and as his wife was the nearest army in sight, he gave a whoop and galloped over her defenses with drawn sword. The little detenses with drawn sword. The little woman defended herself as best she could, but was finally compelled to retreat, and the battle ended for the time being. Several fights of this kind were induged in, and each time the wife was whipped, Early yesterday morning the great battle was fought and the husband was handed over to the bride's recruit, in the person of a big policeman who marched the hackdriver down to the Police station. Sneider stated at the Police

Mrs. Sneider stated at the Police Court, where she swore to a complaint charging her husband with an assault with a deadly weapon, that he has been in the habit of beating her ever since they were married. Early yesterday morning she made some remark that did not please him, when he grabbed an iron rod and started after her. He swore he would kill her, and as she believed what he said she ran out of the lieved what he said, she ran out of the house and sought the protection of a saloon. Her husband danced around until a policeman came along and the wife was released. She tells some hard stories on her husband and, says he is not a safe man to be at large. She says he is in the habit of getting "suckers" in his hack and bleeding them. Sneider will have his hearing before the police justice to-the whole civilized world an era of liberty and fraternity, beyond which hateful hearts and evil minds cannot turn us. We are too enlightened and too liberal ever to become anti-Semites. Still more, we are Christians, and we cannot forget that ancient Israel is, in accordance with the words of St. Pauk, the root from which we syring and the olive tree upon which we wildings have been grafted.

"The Talmudists' definition of the synagogue was an interval between two reigns. For the French Jews the interregnum which begins with Zedekiah and ends with Napoleon. Napoleon bragged of being the King of the Jews, and the Jews treated him as their political Messiah. They could have Jews, and the Jews treated him as their political Messiah. They could have never had a greater one. But the Napoleonic empire is finished, like the kingdom of David, and the French republic has charge of those two illustrious tombs (the monument known at Jerusalem as the tomb of the Kings was given to France by the heirs of E. and I. Pereire)—the one in which the race of David sleeps at Jerusalem, and where rests at Paris the hero who was his entire dynasty by himself, alone.

"France has nevertheless remained as Bonaparte said, the new tribe of Judah, where Jews and Frenchmen constitute but one people.

"The Jews were Republicans by virtue of the Mosaic institutions (I nearly had said Socialists,) before being made Monarchists by the consent of Samuel, and their traditions are sufficiently rich and instructive to show them the way in which they may serve new France.

Six years ago my son was very sick. I employed three different doctors for three weeks, but none of them afforded any relief, nor could they tell me the kind of disease my son was affected with. When it was evident my son couldn't live Dr. Wong examined him and said that he was suffering from one of the 21 forms of stomech disease. Dr. Wong's medicine relieved him at once and effected a permanent cure in a few dars' time and he has never been slok or taken any medicine since taking Dr. Wong's medicine.
